

SITE OF PARKING LOT

Wooden warehouse formerly used by Brace McKay Ltd. in Summerside are being torn down to provide space which will be used for a town owned public parking lot. Located directly back of Brace's new store between First and Foundry streets, the demolition of these buildings also included the elimination of the last store-owned horse shed in Summerside, which was used so infrequently in these days of motor vehicle transportation that its loss will scarcely be noticed.

as the site is located in a centrally located parking area to help relieve the problem experienced by shopping motorists who find it increasingly difficult to find available parking space in urban areas.

3 Reasons For Re-opening Diesel Firemen's Dispute

By ROBERT RICE Canadian Press Staff Writer MONTREAL (CP) — The firemen's union and the CPR enter another round today in the long bitter battle over firemen's jobs on railway yard and freight diesels. The two sides are to sit down at 10 a.m. EDT to talk about a new contract for the CPR's 2,900 firemen, including a union demand for an 18-per-cent pay boost. The union, it was understood, will not insist that the diesel question be discussed fully at the meeting, but it will try to get the CPR to explain why it has refused to talk about it at all. Why is the union trying to re-open an issue many people believed settled last May after the firemen's three-day strike against the CPR? THREE REASONS LIKELY Knowledgeable observers suggest three possible answers: 1. To convert the diesel issue into a tactical instrument, shrewd bargaining device, in the wage negotiations for a new CPR contract, resuming today after four months suspension.

2. To strengthen the union hand in its argument before a federal conciliation board against a CNR demand for "sole discretion" over the use of diesel firemen. The board resumes hearings next week. 3. To stall potential moves by United States railways to get rid of their diesel firemen when contract talks south of the border open early next year. The scrap has precipitated two Canada-wide strikes against the CPR. It has been argued through 4,000 pages of testimony before a federal conciliation board. It has been studied for 10 months by a royal commission which travelled across Canada, visited Europe and finally ruled: "Firemen are not required on diesel locomotives in either freight or yard service on the CPR." The union contends—as it did from the start of the scrap 2½ years ago—that firemen are necessary for safety and mechanical reasons. The strike-ending settlement of last May, signed by both sides, contained a provision keeping all firemen hired before 1956 on their jobs until either retirement or promotion eliminates them. It also gives the railway permission to cease hiring firemen for yard and freight diesels. The union, in seeking to reopen the issue, says the agreement applied to the old contract now up for revision. The company says this is incorrect—that by law both sides must consent to any revision on the diesel rule.

Cement curbs have already been laid on Harvard Street which is ready for an asphalt surface that will be laid from the existing pavement to the railway crossing.
