LATER
OTTAWA, March 29.
Fort Carleton was burned to prevent the rebels taking it.
The half-breeds are very determined. Messengers have been unable to force their way through the rebels, who seem to infest the whole country.
Latest news received to-night from the rebellion is startling. All agree here that the rebellion must be crushed, no matter at what cost. It is rumored that the mounted police lost 65 men when evacuating Fort Carleton. This lacks confirmation.
Throughout Quebec Province a tremendous Fenian scare has spread.
At Battleford a Volunteer guard has been formed. It numbers over 200 men.
The transportation of troops continues to be rapidly executed.
Nova Scotia and New Brunswick volunteers are offering their services. There is an enthusiasm maintained from all points by men anxious to go forward to the scene of action.
STILL LATER.
The Indians are expected to attack Battleford to-day. The mail has been captured, via Duck Lake and Prince Albert. A second detachment of troops are being now sent forward from here.
LATEST.
OTTAWA, March 30, 4.20 p. m.
Intense excitement everywhere. Two thousand troops going West immediately. Things are very serious.
Another Report.
There is now a report of another engagement by which the mounted police lost 100 killed and wounded. It is almost impossible to obtain reliable news. The rebels have thus far had things pretty much their own way. They must be crushed at once or an Indian uprising will quickly follow.
