New York Stocks

NEW YORK (AP) - A spirited attempt by the stock market to break out of its narrow trading rut failed last week.

There are lots of ready suggestions as to why the stock market isn't doing much.

One of them is that the market is attempting to evaluate and adjust to a coming business recession. That is the most barish approach.

Others find that the market is going through a phase of consolidation before resuming its summer advance with renewed vigor. That is perhaps the most optimistic approach.

Monday's stock market was down slightly with volume a bit over a million shares. The Tuesday market was almost exactly the same but with volume a little below a million shares.

It was on Wednesday that the
