

THE DAILY EXAMINER.

SEPTEMBER 14, 1891.

Notes and Comments.

Dr. Parkhurst of Zion's Herald writes pleasantly of "A Sunday in Halifax." Speaking of union he says: "The Presbyterian and Methodist churches work in most happy harmony in all matters of public reform. Indeed the possibility of organic union between these denominations finds ardent advocates in both bodies, and especially among the Presbyterians. The fact that the Presbyterians have been able to make one denomination of three separate organizations, and the Methodists one of five that existed before, lends to the last movement for union considerable confidence."

A new and original model for a horse-shoe has been recently invented by Signor Giuseppe Brunnetti, of Brooklyn, N. Y., which appears worthy of the attention of horseman. It is an automatic shoe which can be applied to the horse's foot without the aid of a blacksmith, and without driving nails into the hoof; it is also favorable for the cleanliness and health of the foot. The shoe consists of a thin flake of iron which covers the entire hoof and upon which the shoe itself is placed. It opens and closes by means of a solid hinge, and is fastened behind by means of its own screw, so that there is no perforation of the hoof. The inventor is selling agencies, and deserves success for his practical and humane invention.

The Opposition are always quoting the New York Tribune as a fair mirror of the Washington Administration's mind. Let them lay to heart a very recent utterance of that journal, so recent as Monday, Sept. 7, 1891. In its issue for that day, discussing the Canadian political situation, the Tribune said: "The McKinley tariff has come here to stay, and the only reciprocity which will be adopted between the United States and Canada will be that which carries its provisions from the Gulf of Mexico to the Arctic sea." Which is a plain intimation, emanating from a source to whom Opposition profess to regard as authoritative, that Unrestricted Reciprocity would mean a uniformity of tariff, and the application of war taxes to the Canadian consumer.

The Montreal Herald thinks the diamond necklace matter of Mr. Mercier's is "only a small affair and concerns only the province of Quebec." The list of the Herald's airy nothings, concerning "only the province of Quebec" apparently also includes such gifts and jobs as,—

- The St. Denis St. mansion.
- The $1,000 coat.
- The $1,200 pair of horses.
- The $3,800 job.
- The $5,000 job.
- The Lockwood $10,000 job.
- The Polette $3,000 job.
- The Whelan $5,000 job.
- The Whelan $10,000 job.
- The Whelan $1,000 job.
- The Whelan unknown quantity job.
- The Baie des Chaleurs $15,000 job.
- The Baie des Chaleurs $100,000 job.

All, as the Gazette remarks, concerning only the Province of Quebec and its ministry, and all, in a good Liberal journal's opinion, not worth talking about.

Says the Toronto World: "Premier Abbott remarked in the Senate on Monday that while he did not propose to define the Government's policy in the matter, yet those who took it for granted that they would not prosecute those convicted of frauds on the government might soon find out their mistake. That statement was significant, for it was really just as good as an intimation of a purpose. Men in his position do not indulge in empty utterances on matters of policy. This coming after the rumored anxiety of Sir John Thompson to take legal proceedings against every wrong-doer will convince the country that such is the just purpose of the Government. Premier Abbott will be considered as under a partial pledge to prosecute, and to tell the honest truth the government cannot properly evade so evident a duty as the prosecution of men who have defrauded the country. There is ample warrant for taking action, and none that can be easily seen for failing to do so. Rascals high and rascals low have operated all manner of schemes successfully with the one object of extracting money and money's worth from the pocket of the country. If these thefts were perpetrated upon a private individual or upon a company their punishment would be sudden and severe. The state cannot afford to neglect the methods of protection and self-preservation in vogue among individuals, nor should the state permit its servants to steal when the state punishes stealing as a crime between citizen and citizen. Premier Abbott, we salute you, with the assurance that up this way the government is expected to do its duty."

Personal.

Edison is worth $3,000,000. Phil Armour, the Chicago pork king, does an annual business of $63,000,000. The Duke of Hamilton is said to draw a neat little rental of $150,000 per annum for his tenantry in the Island of Arran. Jay Gould is again reported to be ill, and it is said he will retire from business life, leaving the management of his vast interests to his sons. The official announcement of Lady Macdonald's elevation to the peerage is made by the Official Gazette published in London. The text of the announcement provides that on Baroness Macdonald's death, the son of the late Sir John Macdonald becomes Lord Macdonald, of Earncliffe. Rev. Mother St. John the Baptist's, Mother-General of the Congregation of Notre Dame, arrived here from Montreal on Thursday last. She is on a visit to the convents of that institution in the Maritime Provinces, and is accompanied by Mother St. John of Calvary. The Rev. James O. S. Huntington, who is to conduct the mission at St. Peter's Church, United States. He belongs to a religious order of mission priests called the Order of the Holy Cross, and devotes his whole life to holding missions and retreats. He accepts no remuneration beyond his travelling expenses, doing all for the love of Christ and His Church. The Rev. gentleman is expected to arrive here from Belleville, Ont., by the evening train next Saturday, and will proceed immediately from the railway station to St. Peter's Church and hold the opening service at 8.30 p. m.

THE FUNERAL YESTERDAY.

A Great Display.

HOW THE ACCIDENT OCCURRED.

The Floral Tributes.

On Monday morning last the shifting orphans team left to take part in the competition at Quebec. They had been doing grand work at practice, and each and every man of them was determined to do his best to keep up the reputation of the Island. They arrived home on Saturday evening. Instead, however, of returning flushed with victory, as they anticipated, their homeward journey was a sad one. They brought with them the corpse of one of their most experienced men—Corporal Rufus Macdonald.

Long before the train was due a great crowd had assembled in and about the neighborhood of the railway station, and by 8.10, when the train arrived, the station was thronged. As quickly as possible after the arrival of the train, the casket containing all that was mortal of the dead artilleryman was taken charge of by undertaker Wadman and conveyed to his late residence on Kent Street. The funeral procession was a large one. Next to the hearse walked the mourners, then came the members of the shifting team, and the citizens brought up the rear.

The funeral to the People's Cemetery yesterday afternoon was one of the largest seen in the city for a long time. The procession left the house at two o'clock, in the following order:

- Firing party in charge of Sergt. R. Matheson.
- Artillery Brigade Band.
- Corpse on gun carriage drawn by members of No. 1 Battery, G. A.
- Chief Mourners.
- Military Escort composed of No. 2 Battery, G. A., Ch'town Engineers and 82nd Battalion, under command of Lt.-Col. Dougherty.
- Galbraith's Band.
- Firewardens.
- Members of the Fire Brigade.
- Veteran comrades, former members of No. 1 Battery, G. A., who were under the command of Majors Pollard and Morris.
- Members of other corps, and ex-members of the Imperial service.
- Citizens.

The casket was wrapped in the Union Jack and profusely adorned with floral tributes, nestling among which were the side-arms of the deceased. The route of the funeral procession was from the late residence of the deceased along Kent to Weymouth Street, up Weymouth Street to St. Peter's Road, thence to Cemetery. The streets along the route were thronged with spectators, and the splendid appearance on parade of "the bold militia boys" and our gallant firemen occasioned much favorable comment. The music by the two bands was also highly spoken of.

Sixty-four veterans marched in the procession. It was remarked that their steadiness in the ranks and the precision with which they marched, indicated that they had not forgotten their drill instructions of former days. Among them were, Major J.B. Pollard and Lieut. E. B. Love, both of whom served in a volunteer company at Charlottetown under command of the late W. H. Loban, 52 years ago, and performed military duty in the year 1839, at the celebration of Her Majesty Queen Victoria's first birthday following her coronation. We noticed also in the procession some of the men who enrolled in the company of the late Major Neil Rankin, known as the Volunteer Guards of 1855, during the Crimean War. On returning after the funeral to the City Hall and before dismissal, Major Pollard, who was in command, addressed a few appropriate remarks, thanking them for their ready response to the request of Major T. Morris, asking them to assemble on the sad and mournful occasion.

At the grave the services were conducted by the Rev. James Carruthers. After the regulation "three rounds" from the firing party over the grave, the militiamen and firemen were drawn up in line, and, to the inspiring music of the band, marched back to the city.

The Island team shifted on Wednesday afternoon instead of on Thursday morning, as at first intended. The weather on that afternoon was favorable and the men in good condition. The shift began about three o'clock. The team was unfortunate throughout. In the first part of the shift the step of the carriage upon which the short skid rested broke when the gun was being raised out of the trunnion holes, and had it not been that the trunnion caught, the gun would have fallen upon Sergeant James Offer, who attended to the short skids with Corporal McDonald, and on whose side of the gun the accident occurred. Sergt. Offer lost no time in setting things right, however, and the shift proceeded. The next mishap occurred when the gun was being rolled from one carriage to the other. This time the plank upon which the gun rested gave way and had to be built up again before the shift could proceed, occasioning a delay of several seconds. Then all went well until the accident occurred. The command "bear down and slow," had just been given and the gun borne down by the hand-spikes men, when from some unaccountable reason the short skid slipped, allowing the gun to fall to the ground between the two carriages. In falling, the gun first struck Corp'l. Macdonald's right arm, lacerating it badly, and then pinned the poor fellow's left leg against the iron wheel of one of the carriages, tearing a big slice of flesh out of the soft part of the leg several inches above the knee, and completely severing the femoral artery. As quickly as possible the gun was lifted off Macdonald. From the wound in his leg the blood flow about the field and into the face of one of the members of "B" Battery, Quebec, who ran to the injured man's assistance, and grasping the wounded limb in his hands stayed the flow of blood as well as he could until the arrival of the surgeon who benighted the wound as best he could with the means at hand, for, strange to say, there was not a properly equipped hospital tent in the camp.

Poor Macdonald was conscious throughout the entire proceeding, and offered suggestions as to the best means of stopping the flow of blood. As soon as possible the poor fellow was removed to the city, where he would have the best medical attendance available. He was carried on a stretcher to Orleans ferry by his comrades, whence he was taken to Quebec by steamer. On the trip over to the city he appeared cheerful, and talked a good deal. He told his comrades not to be disheartened; that it was only an accident, and he would soon be all right again. At that time it was not thought that the accident would terminate fatally. On arrival at Quebec the wounded man was placed in an ambulance and taken to Jeffrey Hale Hospital, where he remained until his death. Sergts. Offer and Whear and Bombadier Proud remained in the city to see that Macdonald received every attention, and were in the hospital with him until within two hours of his death. They speak highly of the manner in which the matron of the hospital and the staff-surgeon looked after Macdonald. Col. Moore, who was in command of the team, arranged to be kept informed by telegraph of Macdonald's condition. At ten o'clock a despatch was sent informing him that Macdonald was sleeping well though suffering much, and that the doctors would operate on the wounded leg next morning, but this telegram did not reach him at the Island of Orleans until next morning, long after the poor fellow had breathed his last. Sergt. Quigley had the sole torn off, and a piece taken out of the side of one of his boots when the gun was falling at the time of the accident to Macdonald. How his foot escaped being crushed is a mystery. Previous to the receipt of the news of Macdonald's death, His Excellency the Governor General telegraphed the camp commandant expressing his deep regret at the unfortunate occurrence and asking for information. The announcement of Macdonald's death cast a gloom over the entire camp, and many were the expressions of regret and sympathy heard on all sides. After the accident, too, the greatest kindness was shown and expressed by the officers. An inquest was held on Friday, when a verdict of "Accidental Death" was returned. The jury recommended that hereafter a hospital tent, with all necessary appliances, should be attached to every artillery camp. The funeral in Quebec was a large one. The remains were placed on a gun carriage drawn by six horses, and all the officers and members of "B" Battery, and others of the camp attended. Sympathizing friends sent wreaths of flowers to be placed on the coffin. A beautiful anchor of wax flowers, the joint gift of "B" and "C" Battery Regulars, Ca.; Col'urg Garrison Battery; Digby Garrison Battery; and Yarmouth Garrison Battery, occupied a prominent place. A handsome floral wreath was also sent by Major Lindsay, quartermaster of the camp, and Mrs. Lindsay, Mrs. Gallagher, and a number of others. On arrival here these tributes were added to by Mr. and Mrs. Williams, of Ridgeway's nursery, who contributed a field gun made of natural flowers, which in the opinion of many, was the prettiest thing in that line ever seen here. Handsome wreaths and bouquets were also sent by Mrs. Youker, A. W. C. Downing and Corp'l. A. Johnson, N. 2 Battery, and others. All occupied prominent places on the casket yesterday. The wax anchor is to be framed, and kept as a memento of the sad occurrence. A fund has been started among the militiamen to erect a monument over the late Corporal Macdonald.

Old Times are Changed; Old Manners Gone.

At the service in the Methodist Brick Church yesterday morning, a large urn containing a very fine Japan lily adorned the preacher's stand. This departure from the old landmarks met with the disapproval of some at least of the congregation, and, as a result, the Rev. Mr. Brewer received in the afternoon a letter, of which the following is a copy:—

SUNDAY, 13th Sept., 1891. DEAR SIR.—I send you a bunch of celery to be placed in the pulpit or before the preacher's stand at the service this evening. It was grown by Mr. Gay, one of our Methodist market gardeners, and I think that he ought, as a member of the Church, to be afforded equal facilities for advertising his celery on the Sabbath as you gave to Messrs. Hazard & Moore in church this morning in advertising their flowers. As an enthusiastic admirer of the beauties of nature, I am sure you will concede that if we go to church to admire the products of the soil Mr. Gay's celery is as worthy of our admiration or adoration as Mr. Hazard's lilies. Kindly place the bunch in a prominent place before the preacher's stand, and read this note to the congregation if you like. From

A METHODIST.

It is needless to say that the elaborate urn with its lily had vanished before the evening service, and we may add that through some oversight the celery did not appear.
