Says Red Victories In Indo-China Present Gigantic Challenge To Free World

By WILLIAM L. RYAN
AP Foreign News Analyst

Communist victories in Viet Nam have presented a gigantic challenge to the free world. They have plunged the war for Asia into a new phase—a long, grim battle without guns in which the enemy will use psychological warfare, political infiltration, underground subversion and propaganda unrestrained by any moral considerations. The battle can be won by the West. But, worried leaders in Asia say, military force alone cannot do it.

The situation in Asia has reached a critical stage. If the government of France is replaced by a new one which pulls out of Viet Nam completely, the Communists will have taken a long stride toward the encirclement of Southeast Asia.

MAY BE LOST

Viet Nam, or perhaps all Indo-China, may be lost already. Unless the French go home from Geneva with some prospect of ending the Indo-China war, the government of Premier Joseph Laniel will fall. And the loss of Indo-China will almost certainly have an effect on France's North African empire. France can look for heavy political trouble for a long time to come in the backlash of Dien Bien Phu.

Britain, anxious about her Commonwealth ties and her large investment in the Asian continent, wants to go slow in negotiating the proposed Southeast Asia pact.

The free nations of Asia, watching the steady advance of Communism, can look for help to the United States. Yet leaders of these imperilled nations are turning away from the United States and toward nervous neutralism out of fear and suspicion embedded in old prejudices and fanned by new propaganda.

Some hope has been expressed among Western diplomats at Geneva, however. They say the very stubbornness of the Communist side may have the effect of solidifying Asian will to resist. Although Indo-China may already be lost to Communism, its loss could lead to some sort of awakening in the rest of Asia, stirring restively under what is becoming more and more an apparent threat.

ASIA FRIGHTENED

But right now Asia is frightened. In this atmosphere of fear, any Asian leader advocating participation in a military bloc, even as a measure of defence, is inviting a political disaster. That is true at least in India, Indonesia and probably Burma.

Talk of "united action" on the continent, or of "massive retaliation" against any overt Communist aggression seems to strike fear into the hearts of Asians that, through no wish or fault of their own, they will provide the arena for the next holocaust. Mention of the hydrogen bomb sends a shudder through the continent.

Arctic Yields New Seafood

WINNIPEG, MAN. — (CP) — It's getting warmer at the North Pole and the Arctic Ocean some day may supply a new seafood for Canadian dinner tables.

These views were expressed in an interview by Geologist Miss Moira Dunbar of Ottawa and her brother, Biologist Dr. Maxwell Dunbar of Montreal, here for a meeting of the Royal Society.

Miss Dunbar, only woman geographer in the Arctic section of the Defence Research Board, said land is rising all over the Canadian Arctic and there has been a warming of the climate. The thickness of ice in the North-west passage is considerably less now than it was 35 years ago.

Dr. Dunbar, Arctic marine biologist at McGill, said soup made from marine plankton tastes like shrimp soup. Individual plankton are much larger in the Arctic than elsewhere.

Dr. Dunbar said it is just a matter of technological progress until the housewife can order a pound of plankton from the grocer.

Dorothy Dix's Column

ize that it certainly didn't improve your life. Your conduct should become part of a past that never will be resurrected.

From early childhood on, everyone wants friends. For parents to deny the blessing of companionship to their children is a grave mistake. Friendships should be encouraged; the girl or boy who makes friends easily has been blessed with a gift that should never be abused.

Since your parents are apparently adamant to your arguments regarding your social needs, try enlisting the help of an older person. Your own brothers should be of some assistance. Ask them to intercede for you. A schoolteacher, or Sunday-school teacher also may have enough influence to change your parents' attitude. The mother of one of your school friends might know your mother well enough to bring tactful attention to your plight. Don't hesitate to ask any of these older people for help; if your own family has closed ears where you're concerned, someone else must champion your cause. Just be sure that never again will you get into bad company.

DEAR MISS DIX: How does one go about winning a man? I've read many articles on the subject and have put every bit of advice to the test, but to no avail. I'm 23 and desperately in love with a man a bit older. We've been going out together for seven months—but still no proposal. I'm a good listener, interested in everything my boy friend does; I praise him, compliment him, tell him how much I appreciate him and how lucky I am to have him. Yet, he says I'm all wrapped up in myself. Kitty

ANSWER: Your young man sounds like an insufferably conceited, selfish creature. He'll accept all the adulation you'll give him; apparently he's already gotten quite a bit. He's just not for you, Kitty, and, desperate though you may be, you'd better give him up before he beats you to it.
