CHILDREN SLEEPING IN CANTEEN

RCMP Are Investigating Suspected Arson Cases

Two cases of suspected arson are under investigation by RCMP in Prince Edward Island. One case is reported to be at the Drowswood Canteen owned by Mr. and Mrs. George Shelton of Stanhope. Evidence of burning was found underneath the cottage but fortunately no serious damage resulted as the fire burned itself out. Police report that children were sleeping in the building when the attempt was made and in all likelihood would have resulted in fatalities, had the fire gotten underway.

A second case of suspected arson is under investigation by the R.C.M.P. This concerns a dwelling house in the village of Fredericton owned and occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Everett Jollimore. Neighbours were aroused early in the morning several weeks ago by smoke coming from the dwelling. Those who arrived on the scene early report that a chest-erfield and two chairs were burning on the first floor and a box of rags was on fire in the upstairs section of the building. No arrests have been made in connection with either of the two cases but police say that the investigations are continuing.

6th Montague Regatta Has Large Entry List

MONTAGUE — The sixth annual Lower Montague Regatta will get underway early this afternoon and spectators can look forward to more classes with a larger number of entries than ever before.

A new motor boat class has been added, and what is expected to become a popular event in future regattas, is another new class, the boy's punt race.

Construction of canteen and amusement booths on Poole's wharf began last week, and officials report that all is in readiness for the biggest and best regatta in its six years' history.

In addition to the boat races there will be swimming races, a tea and dancing in the evening.

The committee in charge of the event has several new innovations and surprises for all who attend.

Elephant's Overcoat Made By Sailmakers

By HAL COOPER
LONDON (AP) — A team of three sailmakers announced that they have finished making an overcoat for an elephant.

The overcoat contains 90 square feet of canvas, or enough for a small sailboat, and has a padded cotton lining. It is intended to keep the cold Alpine winds off an elephant named Little Jumbo.

Overcoats are not commonly worn by elephants, but neither are the beasts often seen in the Italian Alps. Little Jumbo is going there soon in an attempt to re-enact the famous elephant crossing by the Carthaginian general Hannibal, who gave the Romans so much trouble in 218 B.C.

The re-enactment was dreamed up by a British historian, Professor J.M. Hoyte. Most historians believe that Hannibal, complete with elephant cavalry, descended on the Romans by way of a 4,500-foot Mongine Pass or 6,000-foot Little St. Bernard.

Hoyte has a different idea. He thinks that Hannibal arrived via Clapier Pass, which winds its way 7,300 feet above sea-level. The professor walked the route himself a couple of years ago, and is convinced an elephant could do the same.

The zoo in Turin, Italy, agreed to lend him Little Jumbo to settle whether it can be done. There was then a pained outcry from British animal lovers, who pointed out that it gets mighty cold in the Alps, especially by the standards of an Indian elephant, which Little Jumbo is.

The Scottish Flax Canvas Weavers Society decided the elephant should have an overcoat. They provided the canvas. Messrs. John Smith and Company Limited of London—who ordinarily make sails and tents—agreed to undertake the tailoring.

Three of Smith's sailmakers, Albert Sansum, Sr., Albert Sansum, Jr., and Victor Gentleman, cut and sewed the garment according to specifications supplied by the Turin Zoo. They are satisfied it will fit.

The expedition leaves in about a month.

Hoyte is hoping for better luck in the end, than Hannibal had. Having taught the Romans with their togas down, Hannibal gave them a bad time on the battle field but finally lost the Second Punic War. The vengeful Romans razed Carthage and sowed the site with salt.

Delinquent Taxpayers To Get Final Chance

MONTAGUE — At the monthly meeting of the Montague Town Council, the following reports from committee chairmen were presented: Horace Fraser for Streets; Frank Greene for Streets; Claude Nicholson, fire; Charles J. Fraser, police; and Gilbert Clements for property.

In his report for the fire committee, Councillor Nicholson commented on the completion of the new fire doors on the town hall which have been recently painted a fire engine red and awaiting the placement of signs.

After some discussion in regard to delinquent taxpayers, it was decided to mail out notices, and after a reasonable period of time, the names of those still in arrears would be published.

The councillors were informed that the soon arrival for the new sign at Cherry Valley corner had arrived and all was in readiness for its placement as soon as a permit was received.

Town policeman, John White, was in attendance and presented his monthly report.

The meeting was presided over by Mayor Bruce H. Yeo, and present were Councillors Clements, C. Fraser, H. Fraser, Nicholson and Greene.

Inflation Not Uncontrollable Senate's Committee Asserts

By ALAN DONNELLY
Canadian Press Staff Writer
OTTAWA (CP) — Inflation is neither inevitable nor uncontrollable, the Senate finance committee declared Tuesday.

"Tools to contain inflation are available," it said in a report tabled in the Senate. Government authorities and the public should have "the will and determination" to use those tools whenever necessary.

The tools it specified: Restraint in expansion of the money supply, restraint in the growth of government spending, and avoidance of inflationary government deficits.

Price stability should not—and need not—be sacrificed for the goals of economic growth and high employment, the committee said. "Reasonable stability of prices is entirely compatible with, and essential to, the attainment" of those other goals.

NO SPECIFIC CRITICISMS
The report, unanimously adopted by the committee, made no specific criticisms of present or past governments for the inflation which has cut the dollar's purchasing power by 40 per cent since 1946.

At a press conference afterwards professor John J. Deutsch, the committee's economic adviser who helped draft its report, said the six-week committee study has made "a contribution to public understanding of this problem, one of the great problems of our civilization."

The committee chairman, Senator Clarence Emerson (PC—New Brunswick) said "we've got to sell the people and tell the people that inflation is not alarming at this time."

"UNANIMOUS AGREEMENT"
The committee report said there was "virtually unanimous agreement" among the 44 witnesses who appeared — spokesmen for all major sectors of the economy—that there is no actual inflation going on at present.

Industrial capacity was being fully used, the federal government's deficit position has improved since the last budget and the budget deficit was likely to be overcome in the relatively near future.

But there was "a widespread fear of inflation" — shown in a "marked reluctance" of the public to buy bonds—which could itself bring about the inflation that was feared.

"It is a matter of vital cooperation that this inflation psychology be clear statement of purpose, but overcome and that confidence in the future value of money be live demonstration by the authorities in day-to-day policies that inflationary actions will be avoided."
