left hundreds homeless, communications paralyzed, villages isolated and industry at a standstill in parts of the three nations.

Unofficial compilations showed 81 persons killed and 81 missing in Austria. Avalanches buried 207 others, but they were rescued alive. Scores of these are critically injured.

Switzerland counted 19 dead and four missing. In Germany, six were known dead.

An American helicopter and a Swiss helicopter joined in relief work at Blons. The Swiss craft evacuated some of the injured.

Making round trips from Blons to the town of Blunz on a 13-minute schedule, it took two injured at a time. They were wrapped in blankets against the cold and strapped to the side of the helicopter's landing gear.

Supplies Dropped

Other Swiss planes fly valley missions over the Waiser valley and other valleys as well, dropping food, medical supplies, blankets and rescue equipment.

A rescue team of American soldiers and Austrian guides Wednesday slugged through avalanches and deep snow to bring a critically-ill two-year-old boy to hospital.

The six-man team made the dangerous trip on foot to the avalanche-isolated Austrian mountain village of Hirschbichel after rescue attempts by helicopter and "weasel" had been thwarted by fog and avalanches.

by Parliament in its 1951 statute. This protection was specified because of the seaboard area's distance from the central Canadian market. The boards plan exemptions all intra-Maritime hauls from equalization boosts, but it would allow increases in rates on the non-Maritime parts of freight movements between that area and other parts of Canada.

Will Be Hurt "We will be hurt severely," Mr. Smith said.

He recalled that the Atlantic provinces have opposed what he termed "a so-called equalization plan of this nature."

"It is unrealistic in the extreme," he said. "It has had its origin in an obsession."

Speaking for the Quebec government, counsel Lovell Carroll said he questions whether the board's investigation has been complete enough.

Appeal Heard In Liquor Case In Supreme Court

A conviction in the lower courts on an Excise Act charge against Ernest Edward Duffy, Bunbury, was sustained by Mr. Justice George J. Tweedy in Supreme Court yesterday. Following the judgment an appeal against a conviction on a Temperance Act charge arising from the same circumstances was withdrawn by Mr. Allison M. Gillis, appearing for the appellant. In all cases before the appeal of the Court Mr. J. P. Nicholson, Crown Prosecutor, is appearing for the Crown.

When Court opened yesterday Judge Tweedy asked if it were the intention of the interested parties to take the evidence of the lower court. Mr. Gillis said no, as it was desired to have the evidence given anew, in effect causing a new trial.

The first witness called yesterday was Cpl. A. M. Johnson, R.C.M.P., who identified several photographs he had taken at the time of the police raid on the home of the appellant. Taken from various angles and at varying distances, they showed the general layout of the farm property and the relation of the different buildings to each other.

S/Sgt. Douglas George, R.C.M.P., told of arriving by car at the Duffy place in company with other members of the Force. They had searched the house and then gone outside a gallon bottle which he said contained moonshine. In the well-house he found another gallon jar of the illegal liquor. In various other places he had uncovered several pint bottles of it. In a third building on a scaffolding which served as a loft he located two burlap sacks which contained a connecting nut for a "worm", pressure tanks and gas burners. At a corner between two buildings he saw a group of steel drums. One was burned out and another had the bottom charred and he said it smelled as though it had been used in the distillation of spirits.

He also noticed a pile of old lumber. He searched through this and found a large quantity of moonshine in various types of bottles. Later he found a large worm and said that all the parts located fitted together to make a complete still.

Cross Examined

Under cross examination by Mr. Gillis he admitted the Police had never had occasion before to raid Duffy.

Cpl. Peter Jay, R.C.M.P., told of being on the raid and in general corroborated the testimony of S/Sgt. George. He also told the Court that the moonshine seized had tested 106.1 proof and admitted that never before in his long experience had he seized any shine testing so high.

Mr. Gillis suggested that to make shine of such high content and so perfectly clear would take a man of considerable experience in the trade. Cpl. Jay was inclined to believe it was more likely to be the work of an amateur as he did not believe a "professional" would make it so strong. However, he suggested that the strength was more dependent on the materials the manufacturer put into the product and the fact that it had probably been "run through" twice.

The still consisted of a large steel drum with an approximately 20 foot copper "worm" coil. Pieces of it were found all over the farmyard and in the several buildings.

Cpl. Jay in describing the physical aspects of the farm spoke of a nearby road running down to the shore and said there were some fishing shacks there. The pictures taken by Cpl. Johnson were used to identify the various farm buildings for the benefit of the Court and Judge Tweedy asked frequent questions regarding them.

Appellant's Testimony

Mr. Gillis then called the appellant to the stand. He said he lived in Bunbury in the house where he was born and lived most of his life. He and his brother owned the surrounding farm but a few years ago they sold it to the late Willard Kelly, retaining only two acres about three-quarters of a mile from the house.

He stated that at the time he sold the farm Mr. Kelly had asked him to continue living in the house in order to keep an eye on things. However, the witness stated he did not wish to accept the responsibility and had insisted on paying rent.

Mr. Duffy stated that the farm owner and his hired help controlled the outbuildings and did all the farming on the land. He did none of it himself. However, on occasion he had visited the well house when a storm or other cause might prevent one of the Kellys from getting to the farm to start the pump which is turn filled a 1,000 gallon water tank in the basement of the house.

This water served to supply the house through ordinary sink faucets and also was piped to the barn to water the cattle. The hired hands of the Kellys looked after the cattle and outside as appellant owned nothing outside the house. At the time of the police raid last October there were three hired hands.

The witness flatly denied ownership of the still; he had never had possession of it and had never made moonshine in his life. For the past two months he has been living in the city and working as a longshoreman. Formerly he had worked as a carpenter and gave a list of his employers last summer and fall.

He said the road from his house to the shore was a public road and had upwards of 10 buildings on it. Some, he thought, were used for summer cottages. He said he could name any of the court exhibits from his house and maintained he knew nothing about them. He stated he had seen people from the shacks hanging around the farmyard.

Cross examined by Mr. Nicholson he said he had nothing to do with the buildings since he came back from overseas. He had never seen a still set up there and said he knew nothing about it. He "had his doubts" that a still he ever been set up and moonshine made on the farm. Asked if he had not seen spots where head had left a mark on the ground he admitted that they had been pointed out to him by the Mounties.

Mr. Nicholson also made mention of a discovery by the police of a barn containing hay in which the outlines of where three barrels had been pressed in were easily discernible. Three similarly sized barrels were also found on the farm.

In his summation Mr. Gillis based his argument on the theory of exclusive possession. He maintained that when there were parts of the still scattered all over he knew through the appellant's own testimony he might know of the existence of the still there was nothing to connect him with it. Mere knowledge did no imply possession and he cited various cases tried in other Provinces in which exclusive control was the basis of the defence.

Mr. Nicholson could not agree that it probably was one of the farm hands who operated the still as he said no employee would be allowed sufficient unexplained time off from his duties to set up a still and run off the great quantity of moonshine which had been found in the different hiding places. While conceding that it might be possible for the Duffy family not to know of shine hidden in barns which were not theirs he insisted it would have been impossible for them not to have known of moonshine in their own woodhouse.

He agreed that a reasonable explanation could be sufficient to obtain an acquittal, but maintained that a mere denial of knowledge was not enough. Judge Tweedy expressed agreement with this and sustained the conviction.

When the Temperance Act appeal was called Mr. Gillis stated that in view of the previous finding he wished to withdraw the appeal.
