Mr. Westmacott produced a large registered envelope from beneath the sheets and tossed it over to the old seaman.

"That excuse won't do. There are your pension papers. Just see if they are right."

"You will put them in a safe place, or get a friend to do so, and if you do your duty you will go to your wife and beg her pardon for having even for an instant thought of leaving her."

"Don't be ridiculous," said the widow. "You know nothing whatever about it, and yet you stand there laying down the law."

"I will tell you about him—or a little about him, for he has done much which I would not care to talk of nor you to listen to. He was always a villain."

"Oh, you naughty little pussies." As to the business, it had been reconstructed, and the energy and ability of the junior partner had soon made up for all the ill that had been done by his senior.

"Our father was rich, and when he died he made a good provision both for Jeremiah and me. He knew Jeremiah, and he distrusted him, however, so instead of giving him all that he meant him to have he handed me over a part of it, telling me with what was almost his dying breath to hold it in trust for my brother and to see it in his hands."

"I cannot tell you how often he has attempted to get my money from me. He has bullied, cajoled, threatened, coaxed, done all that a man could do. It still held it with the presentiment that a need it would come. When I heard of this villainous business—his fight and his leaving his partner to face the storm—above all that, my own father had driven to surrender his income in order to make up for my brother's defalcations."

"I thought that I should probably hear from him soon, and I did. Last evening there was handed in a note of the usual whining, cringing tone. He had come back from abroad at the risk of his life and liberty just in order that he might say goodbye to the only sister he ever had and to entreat my forgiveness for any pain which he had caused me. He would have tried to see me, and he begged only that I would hand over to him the sum which I held in trust for him."

"That, with what he had already, would be enough to start him as an honest man in the new world, and he would remember and pray for the dear sister who had been his savior. That was the style of the letter, and it ended by imploring me to leave the window latch open and to be in the front room at 3 in the morning, when he would come to receive my last kiss and to bid me farewell."

"Bad as he was, I could not, when he trusted me, betray him. I said nothing, but I was there at the hour. He entered through the window and implored me to give him the money. He was terribly changed—gaunt, wolfish, and spoke like a madman. I told him that I had spent the money. He gnashed his teeth at me and swore it was his money. I told him that I had spent it on him. He asked me how. I said in trying to make him an honest man and in repairing the results of his villainy. He shrieked out a curse, and pulling something out of the breast of his coat, he loaded a stick. I think he struck me with it, and I remember nothing more."

"The blackguard!" cried the doctor, "but the police must be hot upon his track."

"I fancy not," Mrs. Westmacott answered calmly. "As my brother is a particularly tall, thin man, and as the police are looking for a short fat one, I do not think that it is very probable that they will catch him. It is best, I think, that these little family matters should be adjusted in private."

"If it indeed this man's money that has brought back my pension, then I can have no scruples about taking it. You have brought sunshine upon us, ma'am, when the clouds were at their darkest, for here is my boy who insists upon returning the money which I got. He can keep now to pay his debts. For what you have done I can only ask God to bless you, ma'am, and as to thanking you I can't even."

"Then pray don't try," said the widow. "Now run away, and make your peace with Mrs. Denver. I am sure if I were she it would be a long time before I should forgive you. As for me, I am going to America when Charles goes. You'll take me as far west you can. I'd like to see a college being built in Denver which is to equip the woman of the future for the struggle of life, and especially for her battle against man. Some money for the committee offered me a responsible situation upon the staff, and I have decided now to accept it, for Charles' marriage removes the last tie which binds me to England. You will write to me sometimes, my friends, and you will always remember me to your mother."

"Give me your hand, Ida, and yours, Clara," said she when they were alone. "Oh, you naughty little pussies, aren't you ashamed to look me in the face? Did you think—did you really think that I was so very blind and could not see your little plot? You did it very well. I must say that, and really I think that I like you better as you are. But you had all your pains to nothing, your little conspirators, for I give you my word that I had quite made up my mind not to have him."

And so within a few weeks our little ladies from their observatory saw a mighty bustle in The Wilderness when two horse carriages came and coachmen with favors to bear away the two who were destined to come back one. And they themselves in their carriages all dressed west across as invited to the big double wedding breakfast which was held in the house of Dr. Walker. Then there were health drinking and tears and laughter and changing of dresses and rice throwing when the carriages drove up again, and two more couples started on that journey which ends only with life itself.

Charles Westmacott is now a flourishing ranchman in the western part of Texas, where he and his sweet little wife are the most popular persons in all that county. Of their aunt they see little, but from time to time they see notices in the papers that she is in a fever of light in Denver, where mighty thunderbolts are being forged which will one day bring the dominant sex upon their knees. The admiral and his wife still live at No. 1, while Harold and Clara have taken No. 8, where Dr. Walker continues to reside.

It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrup, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhoea and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria. Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children. Dr. G. C. Osmond, Lowell, Mass. "Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other harmful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves." Dr. J. F. Kitchener, Quincy, Ar. ALLEN C. SMITH, Pres., Boston, Mass.

RIGBY POROUS WATERPROOF GARMENTS. Everybody wears them, ALWAYS ASK FOR 'RIGBY.' Mrs. DeWet—"There, Reginald, are those Rigby Waterproofs I have been telling you about. Can't you see how stylish and comfortable they look?—and they are just lovely for winter weather. You always wear till everybody else in the world adopts a new thing before you will believe in it. We really must have them at once." Mrs. Updote—"Dear me, what a sight those DeWets are, out on the streets a day like this without Rigby Garments. It takes some people a lifetime to learn how to be comfortable. Just think how we used to suffer in those horrid Rubber Waterproofs, and such smelling things."
