Automation Scheduled For RCAF On Oct.

By Dave Mcintosh (CP) - Automation comes to RCAF Air Defence Command Oct. 1. Authorities said Thursday the underground SAGE (Semi-Automatic Ground Environment) system near North Bay, Ont., will then be replaced by a new electronic control system called North Bay SAGE. It is an optical-like robot which collects radar and other data. It displays information which works out interception courses.

NORTH BAY SAGE. For let fighters parrying bombers and even transmits orders to interceptors and launches defensive missiles. SAGE replaces the manual control system near North Bay, Ont., which was used by the second world war, whereby a skilled radar operator could guide to targets at one time a maximum of only five interceptors. The electronic system can guide scores of interceptors simultaneously. The manual system will be retained at some radar stations in case SAGE is knocked out. The North Bay SAGE is the only one in Canada and the only one of only five interceptors. The United States which has been built underground.

ALTERNATE HQ North American Air Defence Command has proposed that the

The Guardian, Charlottetown, Fri. Aug. 23, 1963. 18

North Bay SAGE has been altered. NORAD headquarters inside Cheyenne Mountain, Colorado Springs, Colo., is completed in 1965. The Canadian government has not yet taken a decision on this. NORAD request, made early this year.

RCAF Air Defence Command headquarters has already moved from St. Hubert, Que., into the underground combat centre near North Bay. From there it will control operations of the five Voodoo jet interceptor squadrons and the two 30-mare anti-aircraft missile bases at North Bay and La Macaza, Que.

Not all 25 heavy radars in Canada are hooked into the North Bay SAGE. For instance, five Prairie radars at Cold Lake, Alta., Pesho, Alta., Al-sack, Sask., Yorkton, Sask., and Dana, Sask., are being integrated into the SAGE centre at Malmstrom, Mont.

The North American air defence system as envisaged in 1961 has been largely completed except for some unannounced interceptors in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, and Ontario to detect low-flying planes. In the meantime, however, the threat of the intercontinental missile and the bomb-launched missile have created a need.

1. An active defence against intercontinental missiles. 2. A defence system, possibly armed satellites, in space. 3. A 2,000-mile-an-hour interceptor with a radius of action of at least 1,000 miles. 4. Longer range radars to cover trillions of cubic miles of atmosphere and space compared with the present coverage of 100,000,000 cubic miles. 5. Further dispersal and protection of the Air Defence Command system.

NORAD now keeps track of 348 earth-orbiting objects, from satellites to burned out booster rockets. Another 273 objects have disintegrated. NORAD estimates that by 1972 there will be 20,000 man-made objects in space.
