SMOKING DEATH.—The North Sydney Herald describes the death, recently, of Levi Guthro, who, with others, went in a tug to the water-logged ship, Peter Maxwell, lying in that harbor. The wind blew a gale, and when the tug had reached the side of the ship, one of the men, Levi Guthro, residing on the Little Bras d'Or Road, leaped from the steamer's deck and grasped at a rope hanging over the ship's side. In doing so he missed grasping the rope and fell, but before reaching the water he was caught across the loins, between the steamer's guards and the side of the ship; in this fearful embrace he was instantly crushed to helplessness. In this state he lingered, though conscious, enduring severe pain until Friday, when death ended his sufferings. The poor man leaves a widow and many children unprovided for.

MARITIME UNION.

The Truro Star—referring to a union of the Maritime Provinces, says:—"One movement clearly proves that at least a part of the people of Canada are willing, if not anxious, to come together and band themselves under one nationality, and could there be excited the same spirit of union among all classes of the confederacy as exists among the various religious denominations, there would undoubtedly be a better prospect for legislative union between the nine Provinces in Canada. As it is, we believe that the question of Maritime Union, now fairly set in motion, will go on until the initiative step be taken, whereby the price of legislation and government will be greatly lessened among a people free, active and liberal."
