THE citizens of Chicago are arming against the Communists supposed to be contained within the boundaries of the city. During the summer a Communistic rising is said to be expected and in the meantime Miss Frances E. Willard, of the Chicago "Post," is upon the warpath. She advocates a counter plan, and says:—"Down with demagogues and up with patriots; down with injustice and up with fair play; down with greed and up with philanthropy; but let all things be done decently and in order. We have had enough of revolutionary talk about 'bread or blood'; enough fierce accusation on the one hand and impotent lethargy on the other. Come, let us reason together, meeting argument with argument, and remanding grievances to the swift, sure arbitrament of election day." The language is somewhat of the "high falutin'" kind, but there is sound sense in some corner of it. If there was any one place more than another in which Communism would be unjustified, we should have been inclined to say that it was Chicago.

Our Washington Letter.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 11, 1878.

Vinnie Reams' wedding was quite a wonderful affair in its way—no such scene has been witnessed in Washington before. So interested was the public that the little army of policemen detailed for the occasion was unable to keep back the crowd, and the Church was filled to the very chancel, long before the bridal party arrived. The marriage bell, which swung from the centre of the chancel, and under which the bride and groom stood to be wed, was five feet in height and composed of 29,000 common field daisies, "ox eyes." General Sherman gave the bride away, and General Albert Pike, venerable and hoary-haired, officiated as best man. The invited guests were 2,400 in number. Vinnie is said to have $80,000 worth of her statutory on hand. She intends to continue working at her art as heretofore. In her parlor are two wonderful little gems, her own work, which I have heard she prizes highly. She calls them "Idleness" and "Industry." They are simply marble hands, each under a glass case. One is open and toying with a flower-spray, the fingers of the other hold a pen, ready to write. These hands were modelled from Jessie Fremont's, and most exquisite are they in form, veining and position.

Mrs. Fremont is in Washington now. Everybody knows what a handsome lady she was in her youth, and she is no less so in her middle age. Her very abundant hair is white as snow, her complexion fresh and clear, and her expression very animated. She is also a most charming conversationalist, being no less noted for her ready flow of choice language than her selections of interesting topics. Her son, Ensign Fremont, and Miss Sallie Anderson, of this city, recently surprised their own parents and the public generally by a secret marriage; They have been in love with each other for four years, have been engaged for some time, and their wedding was publicly fixed for the coming autumn. They are both young, only just of age. Nobody appears to be displeased at the freak, and the pair are now at General Fremont's New York residence. The bride is said to bear a striking resemblance to Mrs. Fremont when she was of her age.

Church Preferments.

Sir Robert Walpole used to declare that had he taken orders he would have "slept at Lambeth" before he died, and it is likely talent and political subserviency would have enabled him to do so. But in these days a good deal more is demanded to enable a man to achieve the strawberry-leaved mitre. We are reminded of this by the death of the Archbishop of York's father. It was the remarkable fate of this venerable person—a linendraper as our English cousins say, in a small country town in Cumberland—to die in his son's palace, after living to see him for 15 years the third personage in rank in the realm. Dr. Thomson went up to Queen's, an Oxford college reckoned second-rate, and chiefly frequented by the poorer class of Northern students, with as little interest as any young man there. But he soon made his mark as a man of high ability, got a fellowship, then a tutorship, and at length at the death of the Provost of Queen's, of whom a university wit observed that people only remembered that he had been alive when they heard he was dead, succeeded to that office. In December, 1861, when only 42, he was made Bishop of Gloucester, and two years later promoted to York. This latter elevation is credited to a sermon on the Prince Consort, which touched the Queen's heart in its tenderest place. The last Archbishop of York but one was the son of a clothier, and the most remarkable of all the prelates who have filled that See, was the son of a butcher, and with all his pretences and periments in commendam, the great Cardinal never "slept at Lambeth." Dr. Thomson has a commanding presence, and his wife is renowned for her beauty. His bosom friend for a quarter of a century has been Max Muller. At Oxford they were inseparable.—N. Y. Times.

NEWS ITEMS.

The condition of Nobeling is so much improved that it is thought likely he will recover.

At the Paris Exposition the receipts for the first three weeks amounted to $151,318.

The Grit organs are making a set on Mr. Farrow's constituency of North Huron. The "Globe" thinks he is unfitted for a place in Parliament. If he were such a sage as Joe Rymal now, or such an orator as Walter Ross, or such a fine gentleman as Mr. Dymond, there would be nothing wrong about him. But as he is only a farmer, and a bright, shrewd, effective speaker, who puts his points too sharply for the "Globe's" sense of safety, he must be defeated. Oh, of course. He had a majority of 150 or so before. He will have double that again.—Herald.

A curious freak of a bird, which was noticed last year on the London and South-Western Railway, has been repeated this season. A water wag-tail has built her nest on the framework underneath a third-class carriage, which runs about forty miles daily, between Cosham and Havant. The female bird and her four young ones make this journey with apparent great contentment, the male, during their absence, promanaging the turn-table or resting impatiently upon their return diving into the nest to assure himself that no accident has happened. The same incident was noticed last year, when a third-class carriage was also selected, probably because the cars of that class are placed farthest from the locomotive.
