DUBLIN, Nov. 3.

The Solicitor of the Treasury has lodged in the Court of Queen's Bench indictments against Messrs. Parnell, Dillon, Sexton, Biggar, Brennan, Sullivan and Egan; and Sullivan, assistant secretary of the Land League, Boynton, a paid agent of the same; Gordon, a shoemaker; Harris, a contractor; Tally, of Mayo; Welch, a shopkeeper, and Sheridan, publican. After the service of the subpoenas, the traversers will be allowed four days to come forward and plead.

The Land League has received a letter from The O'Donoghue, requesting admission to the League.

The Sullivan included in the first list of agitators, is L. D. Sullivan, member of Parliament for the County of Westmeath. It is calculated that their trial will commence four weeks hence.

Healey and Redmond, both of the deceased member of the Third Borough, will contest Wexford, the latter as a Liberal Home Ruler.

The Gazette contains a proclamation, declaring a portion of Cork County, in a disturbed state, and requiring more police.

At the weekly meeting of the Land League on Tuesday, it was resolved not to admit reporters at future meetings.

Parnell arrived in Dublin yesterday, and laughed when informed of the government action. Detectives are watching outside of his hotel and League offices.

Special to New York Herald.

Oblivions of the threatened prosecutions, the Land League during the past two days has shown even unwonted vigor, while the prosecutions are hardly spoken of in the press. Nine meetings were held on Sunday, eleven to-day. At most of these gatherings there was a large attendance and much enthusiasm. The language and demeanor of all the speakers were as determined and violent as ever. The custom which now prevails at every meeting, of swearing the listeners with raised hands to pay no rent above the government Poor law valuation and take no farm from which a tenant had been evicted, was everywhere followed.

Among the speakers there were wilder spirits, too, who did not pause at generalities. One orator at Ballin advised his hearers to obtain guns and learn how to use them. Another, at Balla, who was, however repudiated by the League, thought that guns were very good in their way, but preferred dynamite and gun cotton. A meeting of the corporation of Waterford to-day resolved after a stormy scene, during which Mr. Parnell was called a ruffian and a humbug, to present the agitator with the freedom of the city. The Land Leaguers also score practically a victory at Bantry. The day being a Catholic holiday the town was crowded. The police was largely reinforced in view of possible disturbances. Messrs. Healy and Walsh were charged before the Court of Sessions with attempting to intimidate Mr. Manning, the farmer. The prosecution declared that when the defendants visited Mr. Manning they told him that his crops would be left to rot if the farm was not surrendered. The counsel for the prosecution was instructed by the Attorney General to ask that the defendants be committed for trial. The counsel for the defence alleged that the agent for the land in question and not Mr. Manning originated the prosecution. He urged that the complaint did not show any intimidation. Mr. Manning's son did not swear to any action of the kind. Both he and his father had been forced into swearing informations by the Magistrates and police. Messrs. Healy and Walsh were both committed for trial, but it has been already shown that the evidence could hardly convince a jury.

PARNELL AT LIMERICK.

Limerick city made to-day a great effort to redeem her boast that her reception of Mr. Parnell would rival the greeting given him by Cork. Notwithstanding the threatening weather and intermittent rains which turned the roads and streets into a vast puddle, contingents poured in from all the surrounding country bearing flags covered with patriotic devices and headed by bands playing national anthems, quicksteps and marches. Fully forty thousand persons took part in the proceedings. The contingents arrived in semi-military order, some mounted, some afoot, under the command of their local leaders. As the stalwart peasantry filed past it was a matter of common note that they kept good step and obeyed with soldier-like promptness the orders of their chiefs. In the town itself there was not the same exhibition of enthusiasm. Only a few houses were decorated with flags. There was a total absence of arches or other signs of welcome. The people, however, turned out en masse. Every window along the route was filled with ladies, mostly young and handsome, who testified their sympathy by waving handkerchiefs. Messrs. Parnell and Dillon left the train at Kilmallock, where they were joined by Mr. O'Sullivan, one of the county members. They were driven by road fifteen miles to the city. On the way Mr. Parnell and his friends were joined by numerous contingents, who acted as escort, and some miles from Limerick they were met by a reception committee who presented Mr. Parnell with an illuminated address. Mr. Parnell replied briefly. The procession, which had grown to considerable dimensions, continued its progress to the city limits, where the Mayor of the city and the Common Councilors, dressed in their robes of state, awaited him with an address of welcome. A meeting was held in a field outside the town, which forms a kind of natural amphitheatre. Messrs. Parnell, Dillon, Synan, O'Kelly and O'Sullivan spoke. The tenor of their remarks was that they must settle the land question themselves, and show the British Parliament that they had power to settle it. It was necessary to adopt a platform which would profit laborers as much as farmers. They had got rid of the great proprietors in France, Prussia and Belgium; why not in Ireland? Mr. Parnell advised the people to offer a just rent to proprietors, then the question might be settled this winter. The most notable feature of the day politically, was the effort made by Mr. Synan, one of the county members who is opposed to Mr. Parnell, to unfurl the flag of sixty of tenore. He challenged Mr. Parnell to define his plan for the establishment of a peasant proprietary. Mr. Parnell replied in a bitter and stirring speech, carrying the immense audience with him. He denounced sixty of tenore as a delusion. It was a bold stroke on Mr. Synan's part, but it will probably cost him his seat in Parliament next election. In the evening a banquet was given to Mr. Parnell in the Limerick Athenaeum, at which a number of prominent citizens were present.

Gone to Rest.

(Published by Request, in memory of Madeline Peake.)

On the other side of the river of death, another little angel stands in robes of Heaven's own whiteness, departed to join the army of the loved ones gone before. Dear little friend! we scarce can realize that she is no longer here among us. Even when we saw her for the last time on earth in her little coffin it was hard to realize that she was indeed dead; but she has gone, and we no more shall meet her till we cross over the river of death to the land beyond the valley of sorrow and tears and bitter parting. We miss our loved one. We hear her footsteps now no more. She runs no more to greet our coming. Every thing tells with silent speech of the little girl that died. But, look ahead! She beckons you onward; she calls you to meet her by and by in Eden's happy fields, where death comes never more to break the ties of love asunder, and where we all shall meet and sing sweet hymns of praise and psalms of victory and thanksgiving with those who have crossed over the river of death before us.

God called our little friend away,
To dwell with him in Heaven above;
In the sweet sunshine of his love,
Through Heaven's eternal day.

We know that she is happy now,
An angel in a fair immortal band;
Where hymns of praise and victory flow,
In that dear Eden land.

Within the cold and silent grave
Her little form is laid to rest;
But where the palms of Eden wave,
She dwells forever with the blest.

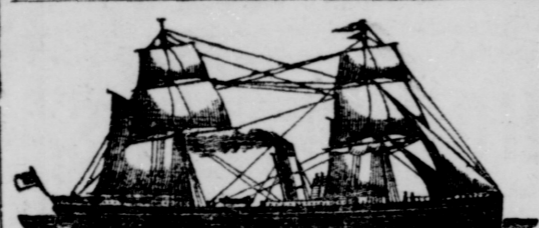

Good-bye, dear little friend, no more
We meet thee on this side of Heaven;
But on that fair eternal shore
A sweeter friendship will be given.
