The bidding:

the question of not making even ten tricks became a distinct possibility. If the hearts now also broke badly, there was danger that a trick in each suit would be lost, and with it the contract. So South applied his thoughts to the task of protecting the contract against a possible 4-1 heart break. After cashing the king of diamonds and ace of spades he played a low heart to the king and exited with the eight of clubs. And now, these precautions having been taken, the contract could no longer be defeated. It did not matter which defender won the club trick.

Opening lead — queen of diamonds. There seemed to be nothing to the play when dummy first came down. But many a declarer in this state of mind has been caught off base and discovered too late that the hand should not have been treated casually. East took the diamond lead and shifted to the queen of clubs, taken by the ace. Had the spades and hearts broken normally, declarer would have taken eleven tricks. But when South led the king of spades and West showed out, the trick to spare that had apparently existed vanished, and

If East took the club, he would be compelled to give declarer a ruff and discard when he led either a diamond or club. South would thus avoid a heart loser. Or if West took the club, the best he could do would be to lead back a heart. This would be taken in dummy and East would have the option of ruffing it or not. If he trumped dummy's high heart he would be obliged to present declarer with a ruff-and-discard. And if East discarded on dummy's high heart he would only be postponing the inevitable. In such case, declarer would throw him into the lead with a spade to force the ruff-and-discard. So the contract was made. It just goes to show that even when bad luck strikes twice in the same hand a little extra care can sometimes do wonders.

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it:
A X Y D L B A A X R
I S L O N G F E L L O W

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophes, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.
