Dr. Kit Puts On Entertaining Program At Civic Auditorium

Yesterday afternoon, in a show-window of R.T. Holman, Ltd., a young lady was placed in a hypnotic sleep at the suggestion of the Great Dr. Kit and all during the afternoon and evening she slept peacefully in view of the crowds of people who passed by until, at the opening of the show in the Civic Auditorium, she was awakened at the command of the hypnotist, feeling rested and relaxed, as she afterwards stated.

The Dr. Kit show was brought to Summerside by the Summerside Y's Men and as a result of very favorable reports on his ability the auditorium was filled to capacity and the "Standing Room Only" sign was hung out early in the evening.

It is doubtful if anyone came away from the auditorium without feeling that they had their money's worth.

Dr. Kit demonstrated that he is a great showman, not only in the science of hypnosis but in the realm of stage magic as well. His show was clean, most interesting and instructive and the Y's Men are to be commended for bringing him to Summerside to entertain the audience.

An outline of his show would take a great deal of copy to do justice. He duplicated and more than equalled many other showmen in the same line and the general opinion of the audience, last evening was that he is indeed a past master of his art.

Miscouche H. & S. Hears Talks

The regular monthly meeting of the Home and School was held on Thursday evening, November 8, in the Convent auditorium, with a record attendance.

After the usual business of the meeting, the Conventors of the Membership, Education and Entertainment Committees gave their reports.

During the business session the following motions were made and carried: that $1.00 be taken from the funds for rent of projector; that $3.50 be paid for a spray for Remembrance Day; that $20.00 be sent to the Springhill Mine Disaster Committee.

A report of the semi-annual meeting held in Charlottetown was given by two delegates. Sister St. Mary Eugenia outlined the program of the afternoon session and Sister St. Emmanuel gave an interesting account of Mrs. J. D. Taylor's address at the evening session.

After taking the Roll Call of parents in attendance it was found that Grade XII were again the happy winners of the Attendance Shield this month.

Then a very interesting account of Miss Elizabeth Reid's address in Summerside, was given by seven young ladies of the High school. Miss Barbara Day introduced the speakers and also told about Miss Reid's life in the life of the people in the Far East for eight years. What she talked about was not what she heard or read, but what she herself had witnessed. Miss Reid was able to take pictures of many of the incidents and places and these she showed to an interested audience after her address.

Miss Bella Gaudet gave an account of the sufferings and hardships of the people of Hong Kong. Miss Barbara Roy kept the audience keenly interested with her account of the release of the Bishop of Hong Kong who has been imprisoned by the Reds for three years. Miss Anne Wedge told of another incident when a French Missionary Priest was driven out of China — and he forced the naughty guards to carry him out. The sufferings and hardships of the people of Korea were described by Miss Emmeline Botts while those of Viet Nam were told with intense feeling by Miss Marie Arsenault. Miss Jean Arsenault added a few details to the account of the Nam and concluded by quoting Miss Reid: "We must confront living Communism by living Christianity."

Then came the highlight of the evening when Mr. Peter Steele, Grade XII Student and outstanding Air Cadet, gave an account of his six-weeks' trip last summer to England, Scotland, Ireland and France. By showing slides of pictures he himself had taken on his tour, he made us see the places he had visited and we spent a very interesting hour across the sea, as it were, in reality.

The President, thanked Mr. Steele for his interesting address. He congratulated him for his great spirit of observation and for the excellent manner in which he presented his account.

A vote of thanks, moved by Mr. P. C. Martin, was extended to Mr. Steele and to the girls for their fine entertainment. This was seconded by Mrs. P. C. Martin.

In his concluding remarks, the President, Mr. Jerry Richard, noted that the attendance at this meeting was perhaps the highest since the organization of the Home and School here, and he expressed his appreciation to all who helped to make this meeting so very enjoyable.

with which you in Prince Edward Island have had some experience.

"Now, the Scots evince what is essentially a sober and God-fearing solidarity in such things as entertainment and highland games, and they show a reverence, often with due ceremonial, for their national poet, their national food, and their national beverages."

"Does this mean that the Scots in Canada are any the less good Canadians? I think not. In fact, a mental picture of Scotsmen, across Canada from Newfoundland to Vancouver Island, eating the haggis with, or without, the proper spirit, should be enough to make Burns' night itself a symbol brought to us and preserved by Canadians new and old."

"But what is the well-rounded One of these problems, or at least what some people are inclined at present to call a problem, centres around the question of non-resident investment in Canada, and particularly United States investment in Canada."

"This has, indeed, become a matter for serious contemplation in recent years, especially since 1948 when the present large flow of foreign capital into this country had its beginning."

"What are the facts? Just about half of all long-term investment in Canada now owned by non-residents has accumulated since 1947. Part of the accumulation represents capital inflow, and part represents the retention of earnings on existing investment."

"More than 80 per cent of the great rise in the value of foreign investment in Canada is accounted for by increased United States investment. In 1948, United States investment in our country, as compared with about 60 per cent in 1939 and a little more than 50 per cent in 1926. NOT FULLY DEPENDENT

Indian River W. I. Handicraft Course

The Women's Institute Handicraft Van held a course at Indian River beginning on Oct. 29 and ending on Nov. 8. Misses Bertha DesRoches and Mrs. Woolner conducted the classes which were held at the home of Mrs. L. G. Ramsay.

Mrs. Doyle, past President P. E. I. W. I., and Miss Heather Coles, assistant supervisor of Women's Work, were present for achievement day, when dresses, gloves, bags, wallets, weaving, etc. were on display. Mrs. Doyle and Miss Coles viewed the work and expressed their congratulations to all on the success of their two weeks' course.

The women were served and all joined in a song sung led by Donald Mac Donald, meeting closed with God Save The Queen.

national unity we are seeking? It must be the product of diversity in culture, in talent and skill, in group interest and activity. It must be achieved in an atmosphere of political and economic freedom.

"Paradoxically, it must be the product of full and free competition, economic and political, among individuals and groups. But this must be competition within a framework of law that secures equity and assures the dignity of individual lives with a minimum of specific rules and regulations."

"In politics, this kind of unity is best achieved, for a country like Canada, through some form of federalism in government, and some sort of pluralism in the general social structure. That is, if local, provincial and federal governments play positive and individual roles under constitutional regulations for co-operation and compromise."

CO-OPERATION

"Similarly in the economic sphere, we must, I think, adopt a form of 'economic federalism' where, within a legal framework that prevents abuse, economic groups can, through judicious compromise between competition and co-operation, attain and protect the best interests of the economy as a whole."

"Thus, the pursuit of certain economic ends, although well within the law, and apparently advantageous to a particular group, may be entirely wrong when we consider our welfare of a broader group. We can see how the efforts of regional, agricultural, industrial, labour and other groups to improve their economic positions may serve to decrease the welfare of the nation as a whole unless they are related to the country-wide scene."

"Only a policy demonstrably beneficial to the economy as a whole, and hence presumably beneficial in the long run to individuals and groups, is likely to be a practically sound policy in the economic welfare. Perhaps this is just as well, for, as Adam Smith put it: 'I have never known much good done by those who affected to trade for the public good. It is an affection, indeed, not very common among merchants, and very few words are employed in distinguishing them from it.'"

"What do these things I have said mean for the actual pursuit of the goal of national unity, which, alas, must be pursued in the face of our separate regional problems?"

REGIONAL PROBLEMS

"What I am trying to get across is that if our peculiar regional problems can be solved — and solved they must be — within the larger national context, then enlightened regional policy of and by itself will do much to further the economic welfare of the nation."

"The same is true of the operations of various groups within the community who have common economic interests. But whether these groups act deliberately, or whether, as Adam Smith's economic theory suggests, they co-operate involuntarily through the operations of the free market, the criterion by which success is judged must be the welfare of the nation as a whole."

"It is, therefore, necessary that we clear our minds of parochial attitudes and habits of thought that may blind us to the future, and that may hinder us from attaining Canada's great potential for growth."

"When we have accomplished this we shall have achieved the most important of the bases of Canadian Unity: growth of vision and faith in ourselves."

FOREIGN INVESTMENT

"What is true in coping with regional problems is true also in our national problems: we must do what we judge best for the welfare of the country as a whole, and our thinking must be on that level. But, further than this, I believe that a discussion of national problems in some way contributes to that national unity we are seeking. It makes us more aware that we are one nation from ocean to ocean, and unites us in knowledge that we have problems in common."

"One of these problems, or at least what some people are inclined at present to call a problem, centres around the question of non-resident investment in Canada, and particularly United States investment in Canada."

"This has, indeed, become a matter for serious contemplation in recent years, especially since 1948 when the present large flow of foreign capital into this country had its beginning."

"What are the facts? Just about half of all long-term investment in Canada now owned by non-residents has accumulated since 1947. Part of the accumulation represents capital inflow, and part represents the retention of earnings on existing investment."

"More than 80 per cent of the great rise in the value of foreign investment in Canada is accounted for by increased United States investment. In 1948, United States investment in our country, as compared with about 60 per cent in 1939 and a little more than 50 per cent in 1926. NOT FULLY DEPENDENT

"It is true that inflow and accumulation of non-resident investment in Canada have been especially heavy of late, but over the post-war period as a whole this country has not been too greatly dependent on these inflows for its development and growth."

"Because of the significance of this fact, I should like to particularize. Between 1948 and 1954, Canadian savings directly financed expenditure in Canada, Canadian savings could have financed more if Canadians had invested all their savings at home."

"It is true that Canadian investment abroad is not negligible. Relative to population, it exceeds that of even the United States. At the end of 1954, Canadian investment abroad was $449 per head of population. The comparable figure for the United States was only $391. Furthermore, Canadian investment in the United States at the end of 1954 was $121 per head of population compared with a United States figure of only $59 invested in Canada."

"As a result of these large investments by Canadians abroad, the amount of foreign ownership was required for financing 25 per cent of the post-war period."

ONE THIRD FOREIGN

"However, unofficial observers have recently estimated that the situation has been noticeably different in the last two years, and that in this shorter period our dependence on foreign capital has been much greater. These observers claim that at present rates we are relying on non-resident lenders and investors for about one-third of our new capital."

"The question I wish to discuss with you is this: does receipt of foreign capital at present rates pose a serious threat to our national unity? Does it mean that control and ownership of Canada's economy are passing into the hands of non-residents? I think not."

"The characteristic of most of the foreign capital that has been invested in Canada is its concentration (in large individual amounts) and its direction into risk-capital ventures such as petroleum exploration and development. Thus, while non-residents are gaining a greater degree of ownership and control of Canadian resources, they are not doing so on a broad base."

"Their ownership and control in certain areas of our economy is most impressive. For example, only two per cent of all our manufacturing corporations are controlled in the United States, yet these establishments account for 30 per cent of our manufacturing production and 21 per cent of manufacturing employment."

"Perhaps the most outstanding illustration is in automobile production, where large United States control firms account for 98 per cent of the Canadian production of motor vehicles. These firms, of course, occupy a somewhat comparable position in the United States automotive production."

However, there are many types of activities and assets where non-resident interest is negligible. I do not believe that non-residents are depriving us of control of our destiny. In fact, in many ways they are fostering and furthering our growth."

"Now, what are the implications of non-resident investment in Canada? Like a young and growing country, we are deficient in certain kinds of capital in relation to the great extent of our needs. What could be more natural than that the surplus capital in other countries, and especially in that capital-rich country the United States, should flow into Canada?"

"Much of this capital comes in to develop our resources because foreign companies, especially the United States companies, seek new or additional supplies of raw materials. To this extent they help us not only to open up our country but also to expand our exports. These are great advantages to be reaped from non-resident investment in Canada."

NO APPREHENSION

In the face of these benefits, I have no great apprehension about Canada being obliterated by a deluge of foreign capital. It resists

"In our own hands to ward off any shift in the direction of our exports away from the United Kingdom towards the United States, while at the same time there has been a further and most significant widening of the gap between the United States and the United Kingdom as suppliers of Canadian imports."

"This poses the problem of whether we are too dependent on one market, the United States market, and too closely tied to it for our own good."

"In dealing with this question it is well to bear in mind that the present direction of our foreign trade has come about as the result of a multitude of private decisions which presumably were based upon the best possible alternatives available to exporters and importers under existing trading arrangements. The pull of our exports to the United States reflects to a large extent not so much our dependence on their markets but rather the requirements of their high consumption economy for our raw materials and basic products."

"This has been illustrated better than in any other way by the fact that as much as 35 per cent of our exports to the United States are provided by companies in Canada controlled in the United States."

PRINCIPLE OF BUYING

"On the other hand, our high propensity to import goods from the United States presumably is no more than the working out of the principle of buying in the cheapest or most convenient market. This is a propensity which could, I think, be altered by salesmanship. If other markets could supply us as effectively, I believe that Canadians could be persuaded to shift their purchases abroad in other directions."

"And so I see no threat to our independence—and in this sense to our unity as a nation—in the present facts of Canadian trade. The imbalance that at present exists—which takes the form of buying more abroad than we sell abroad—is, I feel, a passing problem."

"Our imports are closely geared to the level of our national activity. In times when materials

"On the import side there has been no actual reversal in the relative importance of the United States and the United Kingdom as sources of supply; the United States has been the chief supplier throughout the period under review."

"But the importance of the United States has increased, and the importance of the United Kingdom has greatly decreased. Over the years. At the turn of the century almost 57 per cent of our imports came from the United States and about 27 per cent from the United Kingdom. Today, more than 73 per cent of our imports come from the United States and only 8 1/2 per cent from the United Kingdom."

"In other words, in the last 60 years there has been a very large
