Opening lead — king of diamonds.

The question is what West should do after he holds the opening lead of the king of diamonds.

In the actual hand, West shifted to the eight of clubs, which declarer won with the king. A spade to dummy's jack went to the ace, East returning a trump. It was now an easy matter for South to dispose of two small hearts on dummy's good clubs and the contract was made, declarer losing a spade, a heart and a diamond.

It will be noted that if, at trick two, West leads the king of hearts the contract is defeated. If declarer wins the heart and leads a trump, East takes the ace immediately, cashes the queen of hearts, and gives West a heart ruff to produce the fourth defensive trick.

If declarer ducks the king of hearts, the suit is continued, and again the contract is defeated. In fact, there is no way for South to make the hand against the king of hearts lead at trick two. All of which is easy enough to analyze when the four hands are seen, but should West have found the killing defence seeing only 26 cards

West is trying to get four tricks for his side. It is a fundamental principle of defense that he should dismiss from consideration hands his partner may have which do not lead to defeat of the contract. He must concentrate instead on possible hands East may hold which can produce four tricks.

To assign to East the queen of hearts and the K-J of clubs may be consistent with the bidding, but it will not result in defeating the contract, since three heart tricks become available to declarer before East can get both his club tricks. Similarly, consigning to East the ace of spades and king of clubs will not bring about declarer's defeat.

The only reasonable prospect of getting four tricks is that East has the heart queen and spade ace. The king of hearts should therefore be led at trick two.

BEDTIME STORIES

Ringnecks Good Sense

To everyone it should be clear,.. At times there is a choice in fear.
—Ringneck the Pheasant.

Blacky the Crow is no coward. He is one of the smartest of all the birds. This means that he is smart enough to always be watching for danger and avoiding it. It takes real courage of the finest kind to try to live through a cold winter when food is very scarce. Blacky has the courage to try to do this, although he could fly to where it is warmer.

"Who says I'm crazy?" retorted Ringneck sharply.

Over at Farmer Brown's house food is put out for the birds all winter long when snow and ice make it difficult for the feathered folk to find food elsewhere. Blacky had been watching from the top of a tall tree in the distance. He could hardly believe his eyes when he saw Ringneck the Pheasant and Mrs. Ringneck to go over near the house and begin picking up food right near a window. When they had filled their crops they went back to the Green Forest. Blacky was waiting for them.

"Are you crazy?" asked Blacky in his harsh voice.

"Who says I'm crazy?" retort-Ringneck sharply.

"Anyone is crazy who has been hunted as you have by two-legged folks with those terrible fire sticks that kill, and then will go right out in the open where those two-legged folks live," retorted Blacky.

Ringneck looked up at Blacky. "Listen, you croaker," said he 'You are the one who is crazy. You are starving with plenty of food where you can get it. And if that isn't craziness, I don't know what is. I haven't gone hungry a single day this winter. My guess is that you have been hungry every day."

This was nearer to the truth than Blacky liked to admit. But it was not such a great while ago that you were hiding from those two-legged hunters who were trying so hard to kill you. How do you know they won't be doing it again very soon" said Blacky.

"There are no two-legged hunters for me these days. The only hunters we fear at present are four-legged one two-winged," retorted Ringneck. "They are Reddy Fox and Mrs. Reddy by day, and Hooty and Mrs. Hooty, the big Owls by night."

"are you telling me that you are not afraid of those two-legged folk? demanded Blacky.

"No, I'm not telling you anything of the kind. I am afraid of them. But, I am more afraid of something else. I am more afraid of starving to death than of being hurt by these two-legged folk. I don't trust them too much. I don't go over there to eat when I see them around. Haven't you seen what a lot of feathered folks are eating over there these days" said Ringneck.

Blacky had to admit that he had. "You may be right," said he, "Then again you may be wrong. I don't trust any of these two-legged folk."

"Then I'm not sorry for you if you are hungry," replied Ringneck. "If you would rather go hungry than take a small chance with a little trust in it to get all the food you need, don't expect others to be sorry for you. There's plenty of good corn over there for all those who need it. Perhaps you don't need it."

Will Drill For Oil Well Within The Arctic Circle

EDMONTON (CP) — Heavy oil well drilling equipment has just been moving up the Alaska Highway in one of Canada's most northerly, searches for new oil fields.

The equipment is being stockpiled at Flat Creek Landing, 40 miles south of Dawson City, Yukon, which is 1,700 miles northwest of Edmonton. Later it will be hauled 300 miles farther to the scene of test operations well within the Arctic Circle.

There, in desolate muskeg country, three wells will be sunk by Peel Plateau and Exploration Ltd. a company which holds exploration rights on 8,000,000 acres in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon.

Drilling operations will be carried out by Parker Drilling Co., of Canada Ltd.

RUGGED OPERATION

Movement of the massive rig and the tons of equipment that go with it got underway from Edmonton early in December. Huge trailers and semi - trailer trucks have moved more than 20 loads as far as Whitehorse, in the Yukon, about 1,000 miles northwest of Edmonton.

It took the trucks about a week to get to Whitehorse, where they were stopped because ice on the Yukon, Stewart and Pelly rivers wasn't thick enough to permit crossings. The trek north was to continue when the rivers were solid.

Trucking officials estimate the over-all operation involves movement of about 500 tons of equipment. South of Dawson City, cat trains awaited arrival of the equipment. Twelve tractor trains will be used to move it into the drill site, a round trip taking 20 days to complete. Each cat will make three trips.

The haul is tough, moving over frozen muskeg, 80 files of mountainous country, and through heavy bush, and it will be well into spring before the operation is completed.

Peel Plateau's vast acreage stretches south of Fort McPherson and is divided into two reservations, half in the Northwest Territories and half in the Yukon.

The company has been doncuting extensive geophysical activities on its holdings since the winter of 1953-54
