Sees Defence Against Subs Pressing Need

HALIFAX (CP) — Canada's chief of naval staff said Saturday that defence against enemy submarines is one of the country's greatest military needs.

Vice-Admiral H. G. DeWolf told a press conference that submarines have far better chance than airplanes of getting close to coastal cities," and our greatest need is to devise ways and means of defending ourselves against such attack."

Great effort should go into our methods of detection and destruction, he said, "a great deal of improvement is necessary." Subs are faster and more agile, and harder to find, "and while our new anti-submarine ships are capable of destroying subs it's still hard to find them."

The native of nearby Bedford said the navy was keeping a close eye on the installation of guided missiles aboard eight United States destroyers. "We have no immediate plans for putting them on our ships, but we are watching this experiment closely."

He said co-operation between Canada's military services "is getting better all the time." But he does not foresee any possibility of total integration in the near future.

"One uniform? Not in my time —but there is a lot more thinking along these lines than there used to be."

CBC Praised And Condemned In Two Briefs

By JOHN LeBLANC
Canadian Press Staff Writer

FREDERICTON (CP) — The CBC was praised by the Anglican Church and condemned by an anti-Red group in submissions to the royal commission on broadcasting made public Sunday.

The church expressed admiration for the CBC's handling of the complexities of national radio and TV, though it suggested the corporation's religious broadcasting is weak.

A charge that the CBC "reflects the left wing pro-Communist propaganda line" was contained in a brief from Ron Gostick of Fleshierton, Ont., director of the Canadian Anti-Communist League, which accused the government agency of news slanting.

The briefs were among a series presented to the commission for hearings at Toronto earlier this month but which were not dealt with at public sittings there. They were made public by the commission, now travelling through the Maritimes and opening hearings in Fredericton today.

WANT TAX WIPED OUT

Other views presented in the Toronto group of briefs included:

The Canadian Retail Federation said the 15-per-cent special excise tax on radio and television receivers—from which the CBC derives the bulk of its income—should be wiped out and supplanted by a grant from Parliament.

OLD SQUADRON

The Royal Nova Scotia Yacht Squadron at Halifax dates back to 1837 and received the "Royal" prefix in 1880.

Federal Rates Of Pay Raised In Maritimes

OTTAWA (Special) Following compleiton of a thorough survey of wages, Labor Minister Gregg announced a wage increase for "prevailing rates" personnel of government departments in the three Maritime Provinces. The basic increase will be after the order of 10 cents an hour but it will be more than this in the case of some of the highly-skilled trades.

Welcoming the announcement, Neil A. Matheson, Liberal Member for Queens, said that the increase will benefit a number of classes of workers in the Prince Edward Island National Park, the Experimental Farm, and certain employees of the Public Works and Transport Departments. Highest increase to be granted is 25 cents an hour.

Wages paid labor in Government service follows the pattern of those paid by industry. Regular surveys are made from time to time by the Department of Labor to insure that the spread between industrial workers and government workers vary in different parts of the country, the lowest usually being in the Maritime Provinces and the highest in British Columbia.

Chief Justice Is Speaker At Guardian Bldg. Opening

The following is the text of Hon. T. A. Campbell's address given at the formal opening of the new Guardian building Saturday afternoon:

"Your Honour, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Premier, Distinguished Guests Ladies and Gentlemen.

"It is, to me, a very great pleasure to be present today with the friends of the Guardian, to celebrate with them the official opening of this magnificent building.

"I also consider it a very great honour to be called upon to play a central part in today's proceedings.

"The honour is, perhaps all the more distinct owing to the fact that I have not at all times in the past been in complete agreement with all the points of view so vigorously expressed and promoted by this newspaper!

ESSENTIAL FEATURE

"The presentation of opposing view points is, however, an essential feature of our democratic system of government(as well as of our social, intellectual and cultural development.

'If the time comes when a newspaper publishes only those opinions with which no one disagrees, I think it can safely be said that its editorial usefulness it at an end.

"It will not be possible for me, in the time at my disposal, to develop in any detail the history and achievements of The Guardian, or to give a comprehensive account of the personalities who have contributed to its success, since its foundation in 1877.

EARLY ACQUAINTANCE

"My earliest personal acquaintances on The Guardian staff were Mr. D. K. Currie, who was for a number of years associate editor, after distinguishing himself in the editorial chair of The Pioneer; and Mr. John Hood, who took me (I believe, with some pride) on a personal tour of The Guardian plant during my attendance at Prince of Wales College.

"It was shortly after that visit that the business organization of The Guardian was revamped in 1912, and that it came to be sponsored as the official organ of the Conservative party in the Province.

"I understand that the purchase of the paper by the Conservative interests was, at the outset largely financed by Sir. Charles Dalton, afterwards Lieutenant Governor of the Island.

LONG SERVICE

"Mr. J. R. Burnett was brought to Prince Edward Island in December, 1912, as manager and editor of the re-organized Guardian, and he continued to direct its affairs until his death in 1951.

"The present occasion would be incomplete without the placing of special emphasis on the outstanding contribution made by Mr. Burnett, not only through his own energy and competence, but through his training of a fine family of sons to serve The Guardian of the present generation.

"It is deeply to be regretted that Niall Burnett, who lost his life in World War II, could not be present today, to share with his four surviving brothers their justifiable pride in this new stage of achievement.

TARGET OF ATTACK

"I believe that I should speak principally from my own official contacts with The Guardian. From the time of my first election campaign in 1930 till my retirement from government administration in 1943, I was a target for its well-aimed attacks.

"But I think my remarks might properly be concentrated on that dark period of the Island's constitutional history between 1935 and 1939, when the Legislative Assembly was deprived of the services of 'His Majesty's Royal Opposition.'

'During that period, when the public was naturally restricted in its knowledge of legislative happenings by the absence of an official opposition, we were fortunate to have the services of two eminently competent legislative pressmen, in the persons of the late Reuben MacDonald of the Patriot and Mr. Frank Walker of The Guardian. Those gentlemen occupied a position analagous to what MacAulay termed 'a fourth estate in the realm.'

GAVE VIGOROUS SUPPORT

"As a matter of fact, a vital factor in the continued value and success of The Guardian has been its constant readiness to lend vigorous and effective support to all measures or proposals involving the best interests of Prince Edward Island, the Maritime Provinces or Canada as a whole.

"I might instance its powerful advocacy of measures for the improvement of agriculture, the fisheries, transportation, education, public health, the tourist industry, and the nation's war efforts.

"From the point of view of news, Islanders both at home and abroad like to read The Guardian, not only because of the excellence of its presentation, but because it maintains a happy balance between items of purely local interest and items of national or world-wide importance.

ADVERTISING MEDIUM

"As an advertising medum it serves as a valuable method of communication between those who wish to sell commodities or services and those who wish to buy them.

"It has frequently been thought that the many newly developed channels of information, such as radio and television, would seriously impair the usefulness of the press. Actually, the reverse appears to be the case: rado and television seem to act as stimuli to, rather than as deterrents from, the use of newspapers.

"Perhaps the reason may best be expressed by the motto which frequently appears as a caption to The Guardian's editorial page: 'The strongest memory is weaker than the weakest ink.'

"Not only does a newspaper form a record, which persists after the audio-visual impressions of radio or television have faded; but the reader has the advantage of being able to choose the subject matter of his preference, as well as choosing his own time, and length of time, for each item, whereas in the case of radio or television he is bound by the time devoted (often incongruously) to a topic prescribed by others.

"Radio, television and the press are proving to be complementary, rather than mutually destructive.

SONS TAKE OVER

"After the close of World War II, the Burnett family purchased the interests of McLure and MacKinnon in The Guardian and were for several years sole proprietors.

"In 1953 the Burnett sons elected to join the group of newspapers owned by The Thomson Company Limited. It is often said that there are disadvantages and dangers involved in the formation of newspaper syndicates.

"There are, however, obvious advantages in the direction of improved news and advertising facilities; and I am pleased to learn that the practice of the Thomson Company is to allow complete independence of editorial policy.

A DISTINGUISHED GROUP

"It would certainly appear to be a compliment that The Guardian now belongs to an important group of newspapers directed by another distinguished Canadian family (the Thomsons) and headed by the world-famed Edinburgh Scotsman.

"In congratulating the Burnett family and their staff, as well as The Thomson Company Limited, on the passing of this important milestone in the history of The Guardian, I should like to remind both readers and publisherers of a quotation from the Letters of Junius (whoever their author may have been): 'The liberty of the press is the Palladium of all the civil, political and religious rights of an Englishman.'" istration in 1943, I was a target for its well-aimed attacks.

"But I think my remarks might properly be concentrated on that dark period of the Island's constitutional history between 1935 and 1939, when the Legislative Assembly was deprived of the services of 'His Majesty's Royal Opposition.'

'During that period, when the public was naturally restricted in its knowledge of legislative happenings by the absence of an official opposition, we were fortunate to have the services of two eminently competent legislative pressmen, in the persons of the late Reuben MacDonald of the Patriot and Mr. Frank Walker of The Guardian. Those gentlemen occupied a position analagous to what MacAulay termed 'a fourth estate in the realm.'

NO ELECTED OPPOSITION

"The work of Mr. Walker, with the supervision of the late Mr. Burnett, and with the cooperation of Col. 'Danny' MacKinnon and the late W. Chester S. McLure (who with Mr. Burnett had become owners of The Guardian Company), went far to compensate for the lack of an elected opposition in the House.

"Throughout the term of my political office from 1935 to 1943, I found The Guardian, though ready to attack with vigour any policies of the Government which might be thought to merit criticism, yet at all times ready to support and promote those policies which were obviously in the best interests of the Province.

"Personal relations between my Government and the opposition press were always conducted in a high plane. For these three qualities of an opposition press so admirably displayed, The Guardian earned my sincere appreciation.
