Abram's Village Poultry Club Go On Tour

The Junior members of the Abram's Village Poultry Club went on a tour of poultry establishments on Friday, August 4th. Leaving the exhibition grounds at Abram's Village at 1 o'clock they first visited the large poultry farm of Clifford Gaudet, Wellington. Here they saw over 1000 very fine Barred Rock and New Hampshire pullets arranged and had a chance to see a large double deck laying house which annually houses about 1500 birds, under Approved Poultry Policy.

Next stop in Wellington was at the Registered Egg Grading Station and Killing Plant of Mr. Jerry Richards. Here the group were shown the basic principles of egg-grading, storage and handling of eggs, also the killing semi-scalding and plucking, using the roller drum.

Later Mr. E. A. Holland, Dominion Department of Agriculture, showed the group how dressed poultry are graded. Before leaving the Egg Grading Station the group was treated to cakes and ice cream by Mr. Richards.

The tour then continued on to Summerside and visited the turkey farms of Mr. N. Johnson and G. Seby. Here they saw over 1000 turkeys: Broad breasted bronze, Jersey Buffs and White Holland and Crossbreds. From here the group proceeded to Jenkins Bros. Cannery and were shown through the establishment by Mr. Jenkins. The next stop was made possible through the kindness and generosity of Mr. Jerry Richards. This was at the Imperial Diner, Summerside, where everyone had lobster sandwiches and coffee before returning home.

The tour was under the auspices of the Provincial and Dominion Depts. of Agriculture and was conducted by Messrs. E. A. Holland, C. S. Scranton and H. H. MacLean. The Club Members thanked all who made the tour a success. Messrs. Leonce Arsenault, Manager, Wellington Co-operative; C. M. Arsenault and Jerry Richards accompanied the tour.

UPSET RED

down more by heat exhaustion and too-heavy personal equipment than by Communist gunfire.

The news agency said North Koreans had penetrated 12 miles behind the Naktong River, in the northern sector, driving a wedge 4,000 yards wide through South Korean forces and gaining heights around Pusan, 30 miles north of Taegu.

The triple American drive, launched on dawn Monday after five weeks of bitter delaying retreats, also included the 35th Regimental Combat team from the 26th Infantry Division and some commando-trained South Koreans.

The force, totalling about 9,000 men, was led by Maj.-Gen. William B. Kean, commander of the 25th Division.

At the start it ran head-on into a North Korean invader attack headed east towards Pusan, big supply port about 35 miles to the east. Flanking fire from a few Communist artillery pieces quickly created a bottleneck west of Chindong, knocking out the lead tank of a column of U.S. 47 1-2-ton "Perashings" on a narrow road.

The Americans then thrust forward without armor.

The Lambert dispatch quoted field officers as saying this morning that this early difficulty had been cleared up, indicating the tanks had won free and the U.S. drive was proceeding.

Knocked Off Balance - The North Koreans, with four divisions massed in the Chindong area, 55 air miles west of Pusan, were knocked off balance as they were about to strike for the key road north.

Air force and carrier-based navy planes chewed into Red troop concentrations in heavy strikes when the offensive opened at dawn Monday. Bitter fighting was in progress elsewhere on the 140-mile defence perimeter.

On the northeast rim, the Communist invaders engulfed for a time elements of the South Korean Capital Division. The republican troops were relieved late Monday by a counter-attack.

Midway along the western front, where the winding Naktong River forms a natural barrier, the Communists built up pockets of troops on the east banks. They crossed the river by barge, rafts and even power boats, only to be quickly contained or wiped out by defending U.S. 24th Division and South Korean units.

As Communists were going for the road we had to come along it. This is the coastal road from which this major counter attack was launched. Three observation planes hovered over us to try to spot enemy gun flashes. From time to time American guns were given targets and they let go with heavy booms.

Shells burst on mountains right in front of us. In platoon position the Marines were in their first action in the Korean war and were taking it very coolly.

These are really crack troops. Many have seen fighting here before have done magnificently against heavy odds but they are not trained like Marines. During the shelling some Marines were actually asleep in the trenches. They just weren't bothering with such stuff.

Sergeant Charley Kurtz of New York City sat on the edge of my trench casually calling the shots as they came in. He had been in the army ten years and fought through the Pacific campaign.

The morale of the Marines is right on top and their appearance in action has given the other troops a tremendous lift. With us also is the 26th Infantry Division which is one of the best from the occupation force in Japan.

has put the question of Franco Spain on the provisional agenda of the fifth regular session of the General Assembly opening Sept. 19. The Dominican Republic wants to remove the ban against sending ambassadors and chiefs of mission to Madrid. This ban was voted in December, 1946.

Lie indicated at this weekly press conference that new aggression anywhere in the world would be sufficient reason to convene the Assembly, provided the Security Council could not act. Some delegates have suggested that the Assembly meet in Russia's Deputy-Foreign Minister, Jakob A. Malik, obstructs the Council by using the veto. But Lie did not mention that point. He merely said it is premature to talk about results gained by Malik's return to the Security Council a week ago.

The Council will meet tomorrow to continue debate on whether to invite Communist North Korea to the Council table for discussions on the Korean war. The majority of the Council is against such an invitation, and Malik has made it clear he will veto an invitation to Ambassador John M. Chang, of the U.N. sponsored South Korean Republic.

Some delegates have expressed fear that Malik came back to veto action in cases of some new aggression by a Communist satellite. In that case, delegates say, it would be necessary to go to the General Assembly promptly for collective U.N. action.

SAYS MEAT PRICES AT ALL-TIME PEAK

SYDNEY, N.S., Aug. 7 - (CP) - An official of the city's largest meat packing firm said today meat prices reached an all-time peak last week-end, but that a slight drop is expected within the next few days.

Choice cuts of beef retailed at prices ranging from 93 cents to $1.10 a pound for T-bone steak. Lamb chops sold for an unprecedented 86 cents a pound. The wholesale price of lamb climbed from 49 to 62 cents a pound.

Said one retailer: "I bought two lambs Saturday for $30, the same price I used to pay for a steer."

Heavy Gunfire

There were booms of shells falling off from packets in the hills just ahead of us and they swished over our positions. "You can just about reach out and catch them," said a Marine in the next trench.

More mail coming. We spotted two groups on the next hill. A section of Marines was ordered to clean them out. The groups were probably spotting for Communist artillery. At 0645 in the morning there was heavy machine gun fire down the road.

The sergeant squatting behind me said "The Marines would sooner make an assault landing. We like it fresh. We go and hit an objective hard. But here somebody else has been in ahead of us. We don't know where our flanks are or what is behind us or in front."

Our position was the exact location of a battle three days ago in which the North Koreans attacked the American Twenty-Fifth Division headquarters by surprise at daylight, but the Twenty-fifth turned around, clubbed the Reds, killing from five hundred to eight hundred. But I saw a good many North Koreans' dead still lying around. The hole place stank of death three days old.

At 0900 in the morning a shell hit the slope of our hill but these Marines entrenched in the meadow were as cool as any troops I have ever seen.

I remained there watching more air strikes by Corsairs and Australian and American Mustangs strafing rocketing positions in front of the advancing Marines and then trudged down the road.

A Close Call

More stuff started to fly from the enemy. It was not as heavy as in the European campaign with the Canadians but it was close enough. One high-powered shell landed on the road about two hundred yards from us. I dove for a ditch and did not catch any more. But the crash of that explosion sang in my ears for hours later. I lay in the trench with an American correspondent for a bit. The firing stopped. We got out and tagged the Marines and the Twenty-fifth Infantry and the of the Communist aggressors in Korea will discourage aggression in other places because the risks will appear too great.

"It is going to be hard for nations hungering for peace and not yet recovered from six years of total war once again to give first place to rearmament," he said. But events force us to be realistic.

"If we are to avert the danger which threatens the free world, we must marshal and increase the resources available to resist aggression. We must build up military strength backed by industrial strength; we must accept the economic and financial policies which will enable us to maintain our strength."

The Government felt the security of Canada required further expansion of her defence efforts, in the same way that the United States and Britain had expanded their efforts.

Mr. Laurent explained why the Cabinet had decided not to send existing first-line regular units out of the country. Such a step, he said, "would dangerously weaken our own immediate defences," because those units were designed to defend Canada's own territory.

There had been talk of a U.N. police division of volunteers "and this may in time work out and be of value for areas other than Korea - if and when such a division is formed along lines considered practicable the government will recommend appropriate Canadian participation."

Special Force Recruitment

He continued: "But we feel the present situation calls for something more immediate. The Government has therefore authorized the recruitment of an additional Army brigade which is beginning on Wednesday.

This brigade will be known as the Canadian Army Special Force, and it will be specially trained and equipped to be available for use in carrying out Canada's obligations under the U.N. Charter or the North Atlantic Pact.

"Naturally this brigade will, subject to the approval of Parliament, be available for service in Korea as part of U.N. forces, if it can most effectively be used in that way when it is ready for service. The way in which it could be used in the U.N. force is being discussed with the unified command."

Wants War Veterans

Mr. St. Laurent gave these details about the brigade: "For it, the Army wants young men, physically fit, mentally alert, single or married, particularly just as many veterans of the Second World War as possible.

"The brigade will include infantry, artillery and other elements. The infantry units will be organized as second battalions of the Royal Canadian Regiment of the Princess Patricia's and the Royal 22nd. The association of the new brigade with these historic regiments will have numerous advantages."

The first battalions of those regiments comprise the Infantry element of the Army's Airborne Brigade, only regular Canadian Army fighting formation in existence now.

Stepping Up Production

Mr. St. Laurent said Canada is stepping up fighter-plane production, "greatly expanding" production of the Orenda jet engine - Canada's first - and "stepping up production of naval vessels, armament, ammunition, radar and other types of equipment.

Canada was looking forward confidently to an acceleration and intensification of joint Canadian-American defence production.

Mr. St. Laurent recalled that when Parliament prorogued in June he had promised its recall "if the

Malpeque Swimming Tests Held

Malpeque wharf was well lined with spectators on Wednesday afternoon, August 2nd, as young people from Darnley, Baltic and Malpeque were tested in their aquatic skills by Mrs. Harry Cudmore, Director of Red Cross S. W. S.

Mr. Alex Chisholm, chairman of the S. W. S. committee and Rev. Mr. Cross marshalled the classes into the starting positions. Mr. Everette Llewellyn, S. W. S. Instructor who taught this class, was on the raft during the test and kept a ring buoy close at hand as the swimmers dove off into the deep water.

This informal type of education has been so well organized in this area that young people living many miles from the beach were transported each day for two weeks by a large vehicle in order that they might participate.

Mr. Chisholm was chairman at a film show in Malpeque Hall the evening of the tests. Red Cross films on swimming and Water Safety were shown and an ice cream festival was held afterwards.

situation in Korea or elsewhere deteriorated and further action by Canada were required.

"The situation in Korea has deteriorated and the expansion and acceleration of our defence program will require parliamentary action. The Government has therefore decided that Parliament should be summoned as soon as it is possible to gather the fuller information and to formulate the specific plans we will wish to lay before parliament."

"It is now felt the date is apt to be six or seven weeks hence, though naturally Parliament will be called earlier if it appears that an earlier meeting is required by the international situation or would expedite effective action."

Complete Picture

Important meetings of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization now were going on - they are discussing rearmament - and the Government wanted to place before Parliament "just as complete a picture as possible of the entire world situation as well as details of the expansion of our defence program to meet that situation."

"No time is being lost. We are pressing on, in the meantime, with everything useful that can be done to increase our effective strength."

There was no guarantee that the free nations, with all their efforts, could prevent another world war. But the best chance of doing so was by following wise and progressive international policies and by building up our joint strength with speed and determination."

The last five years had demonstrated that peaceful intentions and policies were not enough to avoid war and "that we must also have the strength to meet and repel aggression." In Korea, a halt was being called to aggression. It might stop all aggression.
