J. E. MORRISON SUMMERSIDE

IN MEMORIAM

MR. ALONZO FOLEY

Bloomfield lost one of its most respected citizens in the death of the Post Master, Mr. Alonzo Foley, on Wednesday, March 1st, 1930, in his 76th year.

Born in Kildara, the deceased when a young man moved to Bloomfield where he purchased a farm and a couple of years later married Miss Sarah Ready of Tignish, who was then teaching in Lot's with great patience and hard work, they built a lovely home for themselves and their family. Being honest and upright in all his dealings, the deceased held the position of Post Master for 36 years and three years ago was awarded a badge and citation by the Postal Dept. for 36 years faithful service.

His loss will be deeply felt by his many friends. A devoted husband and father, his work and thoughts were always in the interest of his family and while going about his many duties, he suffered a stroke and a few hours later passed peacefully to the Great Beyond, just as his sorrowing family who were kneeling around his bedside finished the prayers of the Holy Mother Church for the dying. A staunch pillar of the church the deceased was administered the Last Sacraments by his pastor, Rev. Father Rooney. A large number of friends and relatives attended the funeral at St. Anthony's Church, Bloomfield where Requiem High Mass was sung by the Pastor assisted by the Holy Name Choir.

The pallbearers were: Messrs. Frank McDougall, Vance MacKay, George Callaghan, Gerald Handrahan, Isador Theriault, and Vernon Doyle. Besides his sorrowing widow, there are left to mourn: Marjorie, Mrs. Braden Keefe; Frank in Ossining, N. Y.; Russell in Charlottetown; Edna and Jack at home; Mollie in Charlottetown; as well as seven grand-children.

out on these primitive implements worked by hand.

Later came the rotating mill powered by animals. This was a vast improvement over the hand-operated mill. Here the stones were perfectly flat and the grinding surfaces chiseled into narrow grooves. It was the edges of these grooves that did the actual grinding, while the meal worked its way along the grooves to the outer edges of the stone. This type of flour-mill was used by the ancient Romans. However in about 100 B.C. the Romans used water power which opened up a new era in the milling industry, though no further progress was made till the eighteenth century.

Until the modern roller mills came into being Island folk knew nothing about the fine-quality flour which we find in our homes today. Gradually the old stones gave way to the new metal rollers and grist mills driven by waterpower, sprang up on every stream in the Island. The first pair of rollers did not completely crush the entire grain as the revolving stones had done, but split the kernel into small pieces containing the valuable elements of the cereals, and separated the bran. Each pair of rollers carried the process a step farther until, finally, the whole was divided into middlings, shorts, bran and flour. Those were the days when the farmer raised his own wheat, had his own flour for his family, and the middlings and bran for his livestock. Incidentally, not many of the old grist mills are in operation now, because we no longer grow wheat. The flour mill was an interesting place to see with its creaking wheels driven by seemingly endless miles of belts. Then, too, there were the separators, the elevators, the screening sieves and the huge grain bins that fed the hungry mills. Ever since wheat has been grown and flour milled bread has been a human necessity—the staff of life. So far as I could gather no Peter McNeil mills exist today. Gone too are most of the roller mills where farmers gathered and talked while the busy old water-wheel turned the machinery that ground the golden grains into delicious flour.
