THIS MONTHS COVER

The close of the summer season is very near and the autumn storms will bring many beach finds ashore. This past summer on the Conway Sand Hills members of the International Census were fortunate enough to find two clusters of the egg cases of the Waved or Edible Whelk Buccinum undatum. These fist sized clusters of up to several hundred eggs are assembled in overlapping capsules resembling clear corn kernels. The illustration on the cover is from the book A Preliminary Guide to the Littoral and Sublittoral Marine Invertebrates of Passamaquoddy Bay by R.O. Brinkhurst, L.E. Linkletter, E.I. Lord, S.A. Connors, and M.J. Dadswell.
