A HOLOCAUST.

Seven Men Roasted to Death.

Thirty Others Frightfully Burned

NEW YORK, May 12.

Destructive fires in Pennsylvania are threatening the safety of several towns. At Morrison, in the Sinnamahomery Valley, a railroad train with seventy-five men had been fighting fire, but were finally forced to retreat. They boarded the train and started for another point, when they found themselves hemmed in between the fire on one side and huge ways of logs on the other. Finally they decided to dash past the ways, but forgot that the terrific heat would spread the rails. When opposite millions of feet of burning logs, where the heat and smoke were greatest, the train lurched and toppled over into the fire beneath. The cars caught fire and the men struggled fearfully to escape from being roasted. It is impossible to describe the scene in its full details. The superintendent of the road, who was in charge of the relief train, was burned to death, and six others are known to be dead, while thirty are so bodly burned that many of them will probably die. Several others are missing.

Therefore in view of the extreme urgency of the case and the approaching General Election, it has been resolved to appeal to Ireland in behalf of evicted tenants. The resolution adds: "We hereby summon a convention in every Irish county to select candidates for all seats where the present holders have violated party pledges.
