had brought began to call in no uncertain tones for something to eat. "So you think we will have trouble in finding them, do you? Well, I don't. Listen to that and think again," said Hooty and spread his great wings to go in search of something to stop those hungry cries. Mrs. Hooty did the same thing.

Of the two young Owls in the nest the one who had snatched the Mouse and swallowed it whole was a wee bit the biggest. Now even the tail of the Mouse had been swallowed. He stood up on the edge of the nest and stretched his big wings high above his head. He stretched them as far as he could on either side. He flapped them up and down a few times, but not enough to lift him into the air. Then he caught sight of Hooty returning with another Mouse and greedily leaned so far over he lost his balance. Frantically he flapped his wings. Right then he learned what wings are for.
