

LOCAL AND OTHER MATTERS.

P. E. Island... sell at Halifax at 25 cents per bushel.

TEMPERANCE.—The Grand Division S. of T. will meet in Scott's Hall, Charlottetown on Thursday next.

The consecration of Mr. Racine, first Roman Catholic Bishop of Sherbrooke, took place at Quebec last week.

PENNY READINGS.—Remember the Penny Readings at St. Peter's Schoolroom to-morrow (Tuesday) evening.

POSTAL.—It is understood that Mr. Blackadar, of the Recorder, is to be appointed to the office of Halifax.

UNION.—A meeting, recently held at New Glasgow, to go into union with the other Presbyterian churches of Canada.

FARMERS of the Second Legislative Council District of Queen's County, do not forget to vote for Ferguson on Thursday next. He's your man.

THE DOMINION PRINTER.—We are in receipt of the third number of the Dominion Printer—issued by the Dominion Type Foundry Company. It is elegantly printed.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.—We acknowledge, with thanks, the receipt from Honorable Senator-Provincial Secretary Haviland, of the sum of 70 cents—for the EXAMINER to date—paper discontinued.

We have heard it reported that Mr. C. J. Brydges has sent to the President of the Spring Hill Mining Company, an order for ten thousand tons of coal accompanied by an apology for the remarks about the company in his recent railway report—two lines.

MR. F. J. DICKENS, son of the late Charles Dickens, the world-renowned novelist, has arrived at Ottawa. He is a young man apparently 25 years of age, of medium height, light complexion, and a retiring disposition. He expressed himself as being much pleased with what he has seen of the country. He is to be appointed an officer of the Mounted Police.

IMPORTATION OF FAT CATTLE.—Messrs. Blake Bros. of this city, have imported from Guelph, Ontario, a steer, four years old, weighing 2,800 lbs.—girth 9 feet 3 inches; a heifer, three years old, weighing 1,700 lbs.—girth 7 feet 6 inches; and an ox weighing 2,400 lbs. They are to be fed for the Easter market. The Messrs. Blake's enterprise deserves reward.

RIFLE COMPETITION.—The annual rifle competition of the 1st Battery of Volunteer Artillery took place on Monday last at the Brighton Range, with the following results:—

1st Prize, Sergt.-Major Doherty, $5 and a Silver Watch presented by Mr. H. Stenstrom.

2nd do Sgt. Irving, $5 00
3rd do G. W. Stumbles, 4 00
4th do McLean, 3 50
5th do Capt. Younker, 3 00
6th do G. W. Stumbles, 2 50
7th do W. R. Stenstrom, 2 00
8th do Lieut. Passmore, 1 50

IS THERE ANYTHING IN IT?—The Montreal Gazette (Oct. 15), publishes the following Ottawa despatch:—

"Rev. Dr. McIntyre and D. G. Gillis, of Prince Edward Island, arrived at the Capital this morning. The former is the clergyman who, previous to the elections, is said to have made an arrangement with the Government to give sectarian schools to the Roman Catholics of Prince Edward Island. Has he come to demand a fulfillment of the promise?"

The St. John News of the 21st, has the following special from Ottawa:—

"Rev. Bishop McIntyre and Father Gillis, of P. E. Island had an interview with the Government yesterday, and urged the establishment of sectarian schools in that Province. This is what P. E. Island was promised should they return Government supporters, and it is said the Premier has consented them such privileges."

QUIT TACTICS.—In an Ottawa despatch to the St. John News, it is reported:—The Grigs are again spending public money recklessly, under the pretence of equalizing Civil Service salaries. They intend increasing those of the Senate officials, and in this underhand manner enriching the batch of greedy friends who are receiving Government pay for political services at the general elections. It has come to light that another Grig has been using the standard in Montreal West. Judge Fortino tried the election case there to-day. Hugh McK. Y. treasurer for Mackenzie's election, deposed to having spent $7,500 of which J. G. McKenzie & Co. subscribed $4,000 and the respondent, Fred Mackenzie, $1,000. Respondent says it took that sum, and a 2,000 additional, for general expenses, without using any to unduly influence electors. The prospects are that Mackenzie will be unseated and convicted of personal bribery.

LARGE FIRE IN MONTREAL.—A Montreal special to the St. John Telegraph (Ottawa 19) reports:—One of the largest fires which has occurred in Montreal for years, broke out at 1.30 this a.m., in the Sun's block of stores, bounded by Saint-Jules and Leroy's streets, entirely destroying three stores and the contents, and causing a loss of $200,000. The fire originated in J. McArthur & Co.'s store of paints and oils, and spread so rapidly that the firemen were forced to abandon it and turn their attention to the hardware store of Delisle & McGill, the upper floor and roof of which were burned. The losses are estimated as follows:—Buildings owned by the Grey Nuns, $27,000; Delisle & McGill, $10,000; fully covered by insurance; McArthur & Co.'s total loss, $10,000, insurance $3,000; Victor Hudson's loss, $20,000, insured fully; Hudson, Murphy & Sumner, importers of dry goods, $5,000, by water and smoke, covered by insurance; Kerry, Watson & Co., druggists, G. R. Favre, hardware, $10,000; altogether the fire falls hard on the insurance companies; nearly all the offices are in the city.

A CHALLENGE.—At the nomination of candidates for the Dominion, in Digby on the 15th inst., the lately appointed Minister of Militia appeared in anything but a favorable light. One of his political opponents pressed him rather hard in the fight, and he—ingloriously retreated. Should the Minister communicate his caven spirit to the Militia, we greatly fear for the honor of the Dominion on the day of battle. The following challenge has been issued by Mr. H. W. B. VAIL.

Sir,—With a cowardice that might have been expected of one capable of the unworthy jealousy and malice you have evinced towards me, you retreated from the contest as soon as you finished your several and alternative attacks on me, and statements on public matters at variance with indisputable facts.

For the honor of the county, and in the interests of political morality, and of truth as a right, I now ask, not as a favor, but as a right, that you meet me at any time and place you may appoint, before the election, that I may answer you face to face as becomes a man and a gentleman.

A. W. SAVARY. Digby.

LOCAL AND OTHER MATTERS.

SOCIAL TEA.—A "Social Tea" will be held in Y. M. C. A. Hall on Wednesday next. Tickets 25 cts.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.—The Dominion Government will have the gauge of the International Rai way changed immediately.

AN INCREASING REVENUE.—The increase in Customs duties paid at Charlottetown this year over those of last year, was about $90,000.

SUCCESSFUL.—William Bell of this city has succeeded in passing an examination before the Marine Board at Halifax, and has received a Master's certificate.

SEATING RINK.—A meeting of the Stockholders of the Seating Rink Company will be held in the office of R. R. FitzGerald, Esq., on Thursday evening next, at 8 o'clock.

DISQUALIFIED.—In consequence of a defect in the disqualification of his proposer at the nomination, Dr. Tremain is obliged to retire from the contest in the first district of Queen's County.

SAVINGS BANK.—The balance to the credit of depositors on the 1st of July, 1874, was $256,993.03. On the 1st of July 1874, the balance due depositors was $336,852.85, showing, in one year, an increase of $79,859.82.—Patrolist.

SINGULAR DEATH.—GEO. R. NEEDHAM, aged 24, a native of this city, died suddenly in Boston on Saturday, 17th inst. The young man, who had been employed in a jewelry store on Washington street, had been suffering from an attack of the mumps and had administered to him by a physician a dose of morphia, from the effect of which he died. His medical attendant who was unable to tell what quantity of the dangerous opiate he had administered, seems to have been imprudent in this case to say the least. The young man was much respected for his integrity and generosity of disposition.

TRAIN AT MONTAGUE.—Our own correspondent at Montague writes:—Judging from the business stir at Montague this week, it might justly be styled a tight little shipping port, and, to add to its present facilities, enterprising people here are about completing arrangements with Mr. James of the Telegraph Department, to have an office established here in November next. There is active sale for all kinds of produce, prices ranging as follows:—oats, 40 to 43 cents; potatoes, 24 to 25 cents; turnips, 22 to 24 cents; barley, 60 to 70 cents; eggs, 20 cents per dozen; butter, 22 to 24 cents per tub. At present there are eighteen schooners loading with produce of all kinds besides the Brig. "New Era," Capt. Wm Gordon, which is loading with oats and the large topsail schooner, "Mignonette," Capt. Gardner, which will take about 6,000 bushels of potatoes, and a quantity of oats.

The following vessels cleared from here within the last week:—Schr. Wm. McKean 1273 bush. potatoes and 200 bushels turnips, Three Sisters, 1160 bush. potatoes 44 bush. turnips and 18 bush. oats; J. B. Foote, 1350 bush. potatoes, 125 bush. turnips and 14 bush. oats, Flying Cloud, 1110 bush. potatoes and 250 bush. turnips; W. H. Tibbo, 1475 bush. potatoes; Emily B. 1000 bush. potatoes; Schr. Challenge, Capt. Wm C. White, with general cargo for Boone Bay & Engene, 700 bush. potatoes; G. H. B., 1280 bush. potatoes; Kitty Clyde, 1600 do do and 100 bush. turnips, Jennie Foote, 1800 bush. potatoes and 300 bush. turnips; Freedom, 1360 bush. potatoes and 200 bush. turnips—the whole quantity being equal to about 16,000 bushels shipped this week.

ELECTION MATTER.—An Ottawa special to the St. John News, reports:— "In the Montreal West election case, J. Stewart, one of the proprietors of the Herald, deposed that he and Senator Penny received $500, or thereabouts, from H. McKay to spend in the Mackenzie election. Several other witnesses testified having elected the standard in a similar way, after which Mackenzie's counsel threw up the sponge, and the election was declared void.

"The Ministerial candidate at a meeting held in North Renfrew last night, read a telegram from the Premier announcing that a transcontinental telegraph line would not be located until the Canadian Pacific route was decided upon. This telegram was intended as a gentle hint to the Electors of Renfrew that the final location depends entirely on the result of the Renfrew elections. If the Government supporters are returned the Pacific Railway will run through Renfrew, and Canada Central will be subsidized. If not the Premier will give them the cold shoulder."

Hon. Mr. Cartwright left for Kingston to-night to manipulate the Addington election for Tucker and Smith.

Mr. Cameron (South Huron) has been unseated for bribery, by agent, and had a narrow escape from being disqualified. The Judge acquitted him from personal bribery on his own evidence, but compelled him to pay the costs in both suits.

The Government are using the superannuation fund to reward their friends. Another Customs official is to be superannuated, simply because he has had a pain in his side for two or three days. Thus on the most shallow pretences, the use of these funds has been daily abused."

A Berlin despatch says the Von Arnim's letters have been publicly offered for sale.

The British man-of-war Sea Gall visited Genoa to test the practicability of laying a cable to the Cape de Verde Islands.

Mr. Spurgeon startles people occasionally by his strong jokes and bizarre utterances. One would think that his popularity, which stands the test of time with wonderful persistency, was in need of no "fresh novelties." He has a very real career of unalloyed success, the result of vigorous exertion and unwavering zeal. His eloquence is not of the highest order and his jokes are coarse, but they always "take." We do not doubt his sincerity but we should not like to make him our Gammaliel. His latest achievement was a defence of smoking, for which we certainly are not disposed to quarrel with. It appears that the new College endowed from a fund raised by his persevering energy has been recently opened.

Mr. Spurgeon's inaugural address was rather common-place. His joke was that he might have invited the Archbishop of Canterbury, but he thought they could get a very real and kindling. Then followed an American gentleman, who inveigled against "Little Sins." Amongst these was smoking—particularly the smoking of cigars. Why they should have been singled out for denunciation it would be difficult to see. A large proportion of them are made of cabbage leaves, and therefore can hardly be very harmful. We dare not insinuate that Mr. Spurgeon put up his American friend for the purpose of knocking him down, but the latter he did most effectually. "I hope, by the grace of God," said the pastor of the Tabernacle, "to smoke a cigar before I go to bed." Some people call this irreverence, but in Spurgeon's eyes it is not. He wants delicacy and refinement in his sensibilities are coarse and vulgar, and therefore his language is so. A foolish Anglican clergyman lately declared that Mr. Spurgeon's attack of gout was a judgment upon him. This was a very silly remark, but what shall we say of Mr. Spurgeon's remark when he enquired, "If my gout be a judgment upon me, what shall we say of the Bishop of Winchester's breaking his neck."—Toronto Nation.

CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editor of the Evening Post.—It is the custom of the Times rigorously to exclude from its columns all letters in any way reflecting upon its officials. I trust that the EXAMINER will be more reasonable, and that I may be permitted to distinctly dissent from your article "Our Dual Representation," and from everything contained in it.

The statement of Mr. McLean framed, introduced, and enveloped to obtain the passage of an Act by which dual representation would have been "legal," is not correct; for the Act in question expressly exempted from its operation those who held seats in the Local Legislature at least until the next election. In framing the measure in this sectional spirit, it was not intended to have most vicious legislation introduced to pass an Act which would have had the effect of expelling a member from the House of Assembly by creating a disqualification which did not exist when he was elected.

I am writing this in no sense as Mr. Haviland's apologist. His position, in my humble opinion, needs none. I write without his knowledge. I have not even seen him for some weeks but I am stating what every one who has been brought in any way into contact with the Government must know, that there is no official who devotes so much time to the public service as Mr. Haviland does. It has encroached upon all but absorbed his legal practice. He retains his present position at the earnest request of his colleagues, and of the members of his party, and I think I am not guilty of a breach of confidence, in stating that he allows their request to overweigh his own desire for that rest to which a quarter of a century's active exertion in political life entitles him.

If Mr. Haviland had been a self-seeking politician, and had not been far gone to urge the claims, he fairly might have, and which I, for one, deeply regret he did not, his present position would be on the Bench of the Supreme Court. Had his friends, at a critical time, betwixt themselves, as Mr. Tilly's and Mr. Hugh McDonald's did, your editorial would have been entirely unnecessary as Mr. Haviland would now occupy a position for which he is pre-eminently qualified.

I have not treated this matter from a political standpoint, otherwise one remark is conspicuously absent from this letter, and it is one which most suggest itself to every one, namely, that of all its members, Mr. Haviland is the one whom the Conservative party and the Government can least afford to lose.

Yours, &c. J. Edward J. Hanson. Oct. 23 1874.

Charles Bradlaugh, of radical notoriety, has arrived at New York.

American opinion is likely that their claims against Spain in the Virginia affair will become a matter of arbitration.

President Grant is expected to make some authoritative statement on the Third Term question, immediately on his return from the West.

A special to the Times from India says that Nina Sahib has been captured in Gawalior, has been identified beyond a doubt by the Maharaja of India, and is now a prisoner in the latter's palace.

It is stated that the Emperor William granted an audience to Count Von Arnim at Drott. Zoenberg. This signifies a crisis in the Von Arnim affair and it remains to be seen whether Bismarck or the powerful Arnim family will prove victors.

Mr. Buser is a puzzle to both our old political parties—a geometrical figure whose angles are not to be measured by their trigonometry. At Aurora he managed to reverse the method of the son of Boser—for he was invited that he might lecture, and came within a little of curing him, instead. Neither party seems able to take in the idea of an able public man thinking for himself and forming independent opinions. As long as he was an orthodox reformer, Reformers could applaud and Conservatives abuse him; but what are they to do with after this new "departure"? The position is so novel and unprecedented that they are both at a loss. The one party seeks to win him back to orthodoxy by a little coaxing mingled with the slightest tincture of reproach. The other would also like to secure him; it therefore resolve to flatter his intellectual pride, if that can only be found, and yet it also chafes in turn. Every Greek from Velechia to Therapsis, and every Trojan from Priam to Pandarus is troubled about his future course. Yet Achilles is not to be bought or won. If he could only give for each of his Achilles in turn, his political parties—a geometrical figure whose angles are not to be measured by their trigonometry. At Aurora he managed to reverse the method of the son of Boser—for he was invited that he might lecture, and came within a little of curing him, instead. Neither party seems able to take in the idea of an able public man thinking for himself and forming independent opinions. As long as he was an orthodox reformer, Reformers could applaud and Conservatives abuse him; but what are they to do with after this new "departure"? The position is so novel and unprecedented that they are both at a loss. The one party seeks to win him back to orthodoxy by a little coaxing mingled with the slightest tincture of reproach. The other would also like to secure him; it therefore resolve to flatter his intellectual pride, if that can only be found, and yet it also chafes in turn. Every Greek from Velechia to Therapsis, and every Trojan from Priam to Pandarus is troubled about his future course. Yet Achilles is not to be bought or won. If he could only give for each of his Achilles in turn, his political parties—a geometrical figure whose angles are not to be measured by their trigonometry. At Aurora he managed to reverse the method of the son of Boser—for he was invited that he might lecture, and came within a little of curing him, instead. Neither party seems able to take in the idea of an able public man thinking for himself and forming independent opinions. As long as he was an orthodox reformer, Reformers could applaud and Conservatives abuse him; but what are they to do with after this new "departure"? The position is so novel and unprecedented that they are both at a loss. The one party seeks to win him back to orthodoxy by a little coaxing mingled with the slightest tincture of reproach. The other would also like to secure him; it therefore resolve to flatter his intellectual pride, if that can only be found, and yet it also chafes in turn. Every Greek from Velechia to Therapsis, and every Trojan from Priam to Pandarus is troubled about his future course. Yet Achilles is not to be bought or won. If he could only give for each of his Achilles in turn, his political parties—a geometrical figure whose angles are not to be measured by their trigonometry. At Aurora he managed to reverse the method of the son of Boser—for he was invited that he might lecture, and came within a little of curing him, instead. Neither party seems able to take in the idea of an able public man thinking for himself and forming independent opinions. As long as he was an orthodox reformer, Reformers could applaud and Conservatives abuse him; but what are they to do with after this new "departure"? The position is so novel and unprecedented that they are both at a loss. The one party seeks to win him back to orthodoxy by a little coaxing mingled with the slightest tincture of reproach. The other would also like to secure him; it therefore resolve to flatter his intellectual pride, if that can only be found, and yet it also chafes in turn. Every Greek from Velechia to Therapsis, and every Trojan from Priam to Pandarus is troubled about his future course. Yet Achilles is not to be bought or won. If he could only give for each of his Achilles in turn, his political parties—a geometrical figure whose angles are not to be measured by their trigonometry. At Aurora he managed to reverse the method of the son of Boser—for he was invited that he might lecture, and came within a little of curing him, instead. Neither party seems able to take in the idea of an able public man thinking for himself and forming independent opinions. As long as he was an orthodox reformer, Reformers could applaud and Conservatives abuse him; but what are they to do with after this new "departure"? The position is so novel and unprecedented that they are both at a loss. The one party seeks to win him back to orthodoxy by a little coaxing mingled with the slightest tincture of reproach. The other would also like to secure him; it therefore resolve to flatter his intellectual pride, if that can only be found, and yet it also chafes in turn. Every Greek from Velechia to Therapsis, and every Trojan from Priam to Pandarus is troubled about his future course. Yet Achilles is not to be bought or won. If he could only give for each of his Achilles in turn, his political parties—a geometrical figure whose angles are not to be measured by their trigonometry. At Aurora he managed to reverse the method of the son of Boser—for he was invited that he might lecture, and came within a little of curing him, instead. Neither party seems able to take in the idea of an able public man thinking for himself and forming independent opinions. As long as he was an orthodox reformer, Reformers could applaud and Conservatives abuse him; but what are they to do with after this new "departure"? The position is so novel and unprecedented that they are both at a loss. The one party seeks to win him back to orthodoxy by a little coaxing mingled with the slightest tincture of reproach. The other would also like to secure him; it therefore resolve to flatter his intellectual pride, if that can only be found, and yet it also chafes in turn. Every Greek from Velechia to Therapsis, and every Trojan from Priam to Pandarus is troubled about his future course. Yet Achilles is not to be bought or won. If he could only give for each of his Achilles in turn, his political parties—a geometrical figure whose angles are not to be measured by their trigonometry. At Aurora he managed to reverse the method of the son of Boser—for he was invited that he might lecture, and came within a little of curing him, instead. Neither party seems able to take in the idea of an able public man thinking for himself and forming independent opinions. As long as he was an orthodox reformer, Reformers could applaud and Conservatives abuse him; but what are they to do with after this new "departure"? The position is so novel and unprecedented that they are both at a loss. The one party seeks to win him back to orthodoxy by a little coaxing mingled with the slightest tincture of reproach. The other would also like to secure him; it therefore resolve to flatter his intellectual pride, if that can only be found, and yet it also chafes in turn. Every Greek from Velechia to Therapsis, and every Trojan from Priam to Pandarus is troubled about his future course. Yet Achilles is not to be bought or won. If he could only give for each of his Achilles in turn, his political parties—a geometrical figure whose angles are not to be measured by their trigonometry. At Aurora he managed to reverse the method of the son of Boser—for he was invited that he might lecture, and came within a little of curing him, instead. Neither party seems able to take in the idea of an able public man thinking for himself and forming independent opinions. As long as he was an orthodox reformer, Reformers could applaud and Conservatives abuse him; but what are they to do with after this new "departure"? The position is so novel and unprecedented that they are both at a loss. The one party seeks to win him back to orthodoxy by a little coaxing mingled with the slightest tincture of reproach. The other would also like to secure him; it therefore resolve to flatter his intellectual pride, if that can only be found, and yet it also chafes in turn. Every Greek from Velechia to Therapsis, and every Trojan from Priam to Pandarus is troubled about his future course. Yet Achilles is not to be bought or won. If he could only give for each of his Achilles in turn, his political parties—a geometrical figure whose angles are not to be measured by their trigonometry. At Aurora he managed to reverse the method of the son of Boser—for he was invited that he might lecture, and came within a little of curing him, instead. Neither party seems able to take in the idea of an able public man thinking for himself and forming independent opinions. As long as he was an orthodox reformer, Reformers could applaud and Conservatives abuse him; but what are they to do with after this new "departure"? The position is so novel and unprecedented that they are both at a loss. The one party seeks to win him back to orthodoxy by a little coaxing mingled with the slightest tincture of reproach. The other would also like to secure him; it therefore resolve to flatter his intellectual pride, if that can only be found, and yet it also chafes in turn. Every Greek from Velechia to Therapsis, and every Trojan from Priam to Pandarus is troubled about his future course. Yet Achilles is not to be bought or won. If he could only give for each of his Achilles in turn, his political parties—a geometrical figure whose angles are not to be measured by their trigonometry. At Aurora he managed to reverse the method of the son of Boser—for he was invited that he might lecture, and came within a little of curing him, instead. Neither party seems able to take in the idea of an able public man thinking for himself and forming independent opinions. As long as he was an orthodox reformer, Reformers could applaud and Conservatives abuse him; but what are they to do with after this new "departure"? The position is so novel and unprecedented that they are both at a loss. The one party seeks to win him back to orthodoxy by a little coaxing mingled with the slightest tincture of reproach. The other would also like to secure him; it therefore resolve to flatter his intellectual pride, if that can only be found, and yet it also chafes in turn. Every Greek from Velechia to Therapsis, and every Trojan from Priam to Pandarus is troubled about his future course. Yet Achilles is not to be bought or won. If he could only give for each of his Achilles in turn, his political parties—a geometrical figure whose angles are not to be measured by their trigonometry. At Aurora he managed to reverse the method of the son of Boser—for he was invited that he might lecture, and came within a little of curing him, instead. Neither party seems able to take in the idea of an able public man thinking for himself and forming independent opinions. As long as he was an orthodox reformer, Reformers could applaud and Conservatives abuse him; but what are they to do with after this new "departure"? The position is so novel and unprecedented that they are both at a loss. The one party seeks to win him back to orthodoxy by a little coaxing mingled with the slightest tincture of reproach. The other would also like to secure him; it therefore resolve to flatter his intellectual pride, if that can only be found, and yet it also chafes in turn. Every Greek from Velechia to Therapsis, and every Trojan from Priam to Pandarus is troubled about his future course. Yet Achilles is not to be bought or won. If he could only give for each of his Achilles in turn, his political parties—a geometrical figure whose angles are not to be measured by their trigonometry. At Aurora he managed to reverse the method of the son of Boser—for he was invited that he might lecture, and came within a little of curing him, instead. Neither party seems able to take in the idea of an able public man thinking for himself and forming independent opinions. As long as he was an orthodox reformer, Reformers could applaud and Conservatives abuse him; but what are they to do with after this new "departure"? The position is so novel and unprecedented that they are both at a loss. The one party seeks to win him back to orthodoxy by a little coaxing mingled with the slightest tincture of reproach. The other would also like to secure him; it therefore resolve to flatter his intellectual pride, if that can only be found, and yet it also chafes in turn. Every Greek from Velechia to Therapsis, and every Trojan from Priam to Pandarus is troubled about his future course. Yet Achilles is not to be bought or won. If he could only give for each of his Achilles in turn, his political parties—a geometrical figure whose angles are not to be measured by their trigonometry. At Aurora he managed to reverse the method of the son of Boser—for he was invited that he might lecture, and came within a little of curing him, instead. Neither party seems able to take in the idea of an able public man thinking for himself and forming independent opinions. As long as he was an orthodox reformer, Reformers could applaud and Conservatives abuse him; but what are they to do with after this new "departure"? The position is so novel and unprecedented that they are both at a loss. The one party seeks to win him back to orthodoxy by a little coaxing mingled with the slightest tincture of reproach. The other would also like to secure him; it therefore resolve to flatter his intellectual pride, if that can only be found, and yet it also chafes in turn. Every Greek from Velechia to Therapsis, and every Trojan from Priam to Pandarus is troubled about his future course. Yet Achilles is not to be bought or won. If he could only give for each of his Achilles in turn, his political parties—a geometrical figure whose angles are not to be measured by their trigonometry. At Aurora he managed to reverse the method of the son of Boser—for he was invited that he might lecture, and came within a little of curing him, instead. Neither party seems able to take in the idea of an able public man thinking for himself and forming independent opinions. As long as he was an orthodox reformer, Reformers could applaud and Conservatives abuse him; but what are they to do with after this new "departure"? The position is so novel and unprecedented that they are both at a loss. The one party seeks to win him back to orthodoxy by a little coaxing mingled with the slightest tincture of reproach. The other would also like to secure him; it therefore resolve to flatter his intellectual pride, if that can only be found, and yet it also chafes in turn. Every Greek from Velechia to Therapsis, and every Trojan from Priam to Pandarus is troubled about his future course. Yet Achilles is not to be bought or won. If he could only give for each of his Achilles in turn, his political parties—a geometrical figure whose angles are not to be measured by their trigonometry. At Aurora he managed to reverse the method of the son of Boser—for he was invited that he might lecture, and came within a little of curing him, instead. Neither party seems able to take in the idea of an able public man thinking for himself and forming independent opinions. As long as he was an orthodox reformer, Reformers could applaud and Conservatives abuse him; but what are they to do with after this new "departure"? The position is so novel and unprecedented that they are both at a loss. The one party seeks to win him back to orthodoxy by a little coaxing mingled with the slightest tincture of reproach. The other would also like to secure him; it therefore resolve to flatter his intellectual pride, if that can only be found, and yet it also chafes in turn. Every Greek from Velechia to Therapsis, and every Trojan from Priam to Pandarus is troubled about his future course. Yet Achilles is not to be bought or won. If he could only give for each of his Achilles in turn, his political parties—a geometrical figure whose angles are not to be measured by their trigonometry. At Aurora he managed to reverse the method of the son of Boser—for he was invited that he might lecture, and came within a little of curing him, instead. Neither party seems able to take in the idea of an able public man thinking for himself and forming independent opinions. As long as he was an orthodox reformer, Reformers could applaud and Conservatives abuse him; but what are they to do with after this new "departure"? The position is so novel and unprecedented that they are both at a loss. The one party seeks to win him back to orthodoxy by a little coaxing mingled with the slightest tincture of reproach. The other would also like to secure him; it therefore resolve to flatter his intellectual pride, if that can only be found, and yet it also chafes in turn. Every Greek from Velechia to Therapsis, and every Trojan from Priam to Pandarus is troubled about his future course. Yet Achilles is not to be bought or won. If he could only give for each of his Achilles in turn, his political parties—a geometrical figure whose angles are not to be measured by their trigonometry. At Aurora he managed to reverse the method of the son of Boser—for he was invited that he might lecture, and came within a little of curing him, instead. Neither party seems able to take in the idea of an able public man thinking for himself and forming independent opinions. As long as he was an orthodox reformer, Reformers could applaud and Conservatives abuse him; but what are they to do with after this new "departure"? The position is so novel and unprecedented that they are both at a loss. The one party seeks to win him back to orthodoxy by a little coaxing mingled with the slightest tincture of reproach. The other would also like to secure him; it therefore resolve to flatter his intellectual pride, if that can only be found, and yet it also chafes in turn. Every Greek from Velechia to Therapsis, and every Trojan from Priam to Pandarus is troubled about his future course. Yet Achilles is not to be bought or won. If he could only give for each of his Achilles in turn, his political parties—a geometrical figure whose angles are not to be measured by their trigonometry. At Aurora he managed to reverse the method of the son of Boser—for he was invited that he might lecture, and came within a little of curing him, instead. Neither party seems able to take in the idea of an able public man thinking for himself and forming independent opinions. As long as he was an orthodox reformer, Reformers could applaud and Conservatives abuse him; but what are they to do with after this new "departure"? The position is so novel and unprecedented that they are both at a loss. The one party seeks to win him back to orthodoxy by a little coaxing mingled with the slightest tincture of reproach. The other would also like to secure him; it therefore resolve to flatter his intellectual pride, if that can only be found, and yet it also chafes in turn. Every Greek from Velechia to Therapsis, and every Trojan from Priam to Pandarus is troubled about his future course. Yet Achilles is not to be bought or won. If he could only give for each of his Achilles in turn, his political parties—a geometrical figure whose angles are not to be measured by their trigonometry. At Aurora he managed to reverse the method of the son of Boser—for he was invited that he might lecture, and came within a little of curing him, instead. Neither party seems able to take in the idea of an able public man thinking for himself and forming independent opinions. As long as he was an orthodox reformer, Reformers could applaud and Conservatives abuse him; but what are they to do with after this new "departure"? The position is so novel and unprecedented that they are both at a loss. The one party seeks to win him back to orthodoxy by a little coaxing mingled with the slightest tincture of reproach. The other would also like to secure him; it therefore resolve to flatter his intellectual pride, if that can only be found, and yet it also chafes in turn. Every Greek from Velechia to Therapsis, and every Trojan from Priam to Pandarus is troubled about his future course. Yet Achilles is not to be bought or won. If he could only give for each of his Achilles in turn, his political parties—a geometrical figure whose angles are not to be measured by their trigonometry. At Aurora he managed to reverse the method of the son of Boser—for he was invited that he might lecture, and came within a little of curing him, instead. Neither party seems able to take in the idea of an able public man thinking for himself and forming independent opinions. As long as he was an orthodox reformer, Reformers could applaud and Conservatives abuse him; but what are they to do with after this new "departure"? The position is so novel and unprecedented that they are both at a loss. The one party seeks to win him back to orthodoxy by a little coaxing mingled with the slightest tincture of reproach. The other would also like to secure him; it therefore resolve to flatter his intellectual pride, if that can only be found, and yet it also chafes in turn. Every Greek from Velechia to Therapsis, and every Trojan from Priam to Pandarus is troubled about his future course. Yet Achilles is not to be bought or won. If he could only give for each of his Achilles in turn, his political parties—a geometrical figure whose angles are not to be measured by their trigonometry. At Aurora he managed to reverse the method of the son of Boser—for he was invited that he might lecture, and came within a little of curing him, instead. Neither party seems able to take in the idea of an able public man thinking for himself and forming independent opinions. As long as he was an orthodox reformer, Reformers could applaud and Conservatives abuse him; but what are they to do with after this new "departure"? The position is so novel and unprecedented that they are both at a loss. The one party seeks to win him back to orthodoxy by a little coaxing mingled with the slightest tincture of reproach. The other would also like to secure him; it therefore resolve to flatter his intellectual pride, if that can only be found, and yet it also chafes in turn. Every Greek from Velechia to Therapsis, and every Trojan from Priam to Pandarus is troubled about his future course. Yet Achilles is not to be bought or won. If he could only give for each of his Achilles in turn, his political parties—a geometrical figure whose angles are not to be measured by their trigonometry. At Aurora he managed to reverse the method of the son of Boser—for he was invited that he might lecture, and came within a little of curing him, instead. Neither party seems able to take in the idea of an able public man thinking for himself and forming independent opinions. As long as he was an orthodox reformer, Reformers could applaud and Conservatives abuse him; but what are they to do with after this new "departure"? The position is so novel and unprecedented that they are both at a loss. The one party seeks to win him back to orthodoxy by a little coaxing mingled with the slightest tincture of reproach. The other would also like to secure him; it therefore resolve to flatter his intellectual pride, if that can only be found, and yet it also chafes in turn. Every Greek from Velechia to Therapsis, and every Trojan from Priam to Pandarus is troubled about his future course. Yet Achilles is not to be bought or won. If he could only give for each of his Achilles in turn, his political parties—a geometrical figure whose angles are not to be measured by their trigonometry. At Aurora he managed to reverse the method of the son of Boser—for he was invited that he might lecture, and came within a little of curing him, instead. Neither party seems able to take in the idea of an able public man thinking for himself and forming independent opinions. As long as he was an orthodox reformer, Reformers could applaud and Conservatives abuse him; but what are they to do with after this new "departure"? The position is so novel and unprecedented that they are both at a loss. The one party seeks to win him back to orthodoxy by a little coaxing mingled with the slightest tincture of reproach. The other would also like to secure him; it therefore resolve to flatter his intellectual pride, if that can only be found, and yet it also chafes in turn. Every Greek from Velechia to Therapsis, and every Trojan from Priam to Pandarus is troubled about his future course. Yet Achilles is not to be bought or won. If he could only give for each of his Achilles in turn, his political parties—a geometrical figure whose angles are not to be measured by their trigonometry. At Aurora he managed to reverse the method of the son of Boser—for he was invited that he might lecture, and came within a little of curing him, instead. Neither party seems able to take in the idea of an able public man thinking for himself and forming independent opinions. As long as he was an orthodox reformer, Reformers could applaud and Conservatives abuse him; but what are they to do with after this new "departure"? The position is so novel and unprecedented that they are both at a loss. The one party seeks to win him back to orthodoxy by a little coaxing mingled with the slightest tincture of reproach. The other would also like to secure him; it therefore resolve to flatter his intellectual pride, if that can only be found, and yet it also chafes in turn. Every Greek from Velechia to Therapsis, and every Trojan from Priam to Pandarus is troubled about his future course. Yet Achilles is not to be bought or won. If he could only give for each of his Achilles in turn, his political parties—a geometrical figure whose angles are not to be measured by their trigonometry. At Aurora he managed to reverse the method of the son of Boser—for he was invited that he might lecture, and came within a little of curing him, instead. Neither party seems able to take in the idea of an able public man thinking for himself and forming independent opinions. As long as he was an orthodox reformer, Reformers could applaud and Conservatives abuse him; but what are they to do with after this new "departure"? The position is so novel and unprecedented that they are both at a loss. The one party seeks to win him back to orthodoxy by a little coaxing mingled with the slightest tincture of reproach. The other would also like to secure him; it therefore resolve to flatter his intellectual pride, if that can only be found, and yet it also chafes in turn. Every Greek from Velechia to Therapsis, and every Trojan from Priam to Pandarus is troubled about his future course. Yet Achilles is not to be bought or won. If he could only give for each of his Achilles in turn, his political parties—a geometrical figure whose angles are not to be measured by their trigonometry. At Aurora he managed to reverse the method of the son of Boser—for he was invited that he might lecture, and came within a little of curing him, instead. Neither party seems able to take in the idea of an able public man thinking for himself and forming independent opinions. As long as he was an orthodox reformer, Reformers could applaud and Conservatives abuse him; but what are they to do with after this new "departure"? The position is so novel and unprecedented that they are both at a loss. The one party seeks to win him back to orthodoxy by a little coaxing mingled with the slightest tincture of reproach. The other would also like to secure him; it therefore resolve to flatter his intellectual pride, if that can only be found, and yet it also chafes in turn. Every Greek from Velechia to Therapsis, and every Trojan from Priam to Pandarus is troubled about his future course. Yet Achilles is not to be bought or won. If he could only give for each of his Achilles in turn, his political parties—a geometrical figure whose angles are not to be measured by their trigonometry. At Aurora he managed to reverse the method of the son of Boser—for he was invited that he might lecture, and came within a little of curing him, instead. Neither party seems able to take in the idea of an able public man thinking for himself and forming independent opinions. As long as he was an orthodox reformer, Reformers could applaud and Conservatives abuse him; but what are they to do with after this new "departure"? The position is so novel and unprecedented that they are both at a loss. The one party seeks to win him back to orthodoxy by a little coaxing mingled with the slightest tincture of reproach. The other would also like to secure him; it therefore resolve to flatter his intellectual pride, if that can only be found, and yet it also chafes in turn. Every Greek from Velechia to Therapsis, and every Trojan from Priam to Pandarus is troubled about his