MARY HAWORTH

Married Man Flirts With An Attractive Co-worker

Dear Mary Haworth: I am a married man in my thirties with four children and a recently acquired responsible new job.

I have grown very fond of a younger married woman whom I see often in the course of my work. She has children also. I know she loves me because of her actions and the way she looks at me.

I admit having flirted and she responded but she is no home wrecker. She is a quiet person but was swept off her feet, as I was, by mutual attraction. Sometimes I dream of her and feel guilty afterward. I find myself wishing we had met when still single.

We have a lot in common: we love reading, music, the outdoors. She tries to hide her emotions but we are very tense in each other's presence. My wife has no idea and I worry lest Sally, with her bottled-up feelings, might tell. Her husband probably isn't aware either, as he is friendly to me.

Should I quit my job (very difficult to do) to avoid seeing her? Or should I tell her about my love for her? Maybe an open discussion would help us to regain our sanity. We live in a medium - size town where most families know each other. What do you think?

To any other man in the same predicament I would say: Talk it out at the start, as I should have done with Sally before all the pent - up emotions took over. Please print this entire letter and help me, if you can, to solve my worry. Many thanks.
S.L.

Dear S.L.: Sly fellow, it seems. In urging me to print your entire letter, you are hoping, I take it, to use this means of getting across to Sally your declaration of love (alleged) for her.

As for what to do to get yourself straightened out, the fully adult solution would be to systematically wet - blanket the flame, with the calculated purpose of refusing to let yourself be thrown for a loss by temptation, such as comes routinely to most married men, sooner or later.

It is this level - headed, unswerving decisiveness, in keeping the hand to the plow of partnership commitments, long since made, to last for life, that separates the men from the boys, in the testing time.

The next best solution if you aren't quite up to the job of self - reliantly routing the devil —is to tell your wife that you started a flirtation that threatens to turn into a three-alarm fire; and ask her help in stamping it out.

Talking things over with a faithful friendly helpmate is a logical way of breaking the spell of a sudden senseless infatuation such as this one, that otherwise tends to gain momentum, if cherished, so to say, in a vacuum of silence, secrecy and waking and sleeping fantasy.

It would be the height of folly, and also dishonorable, to get involved in a hair - down conversation or possibly ruinous exchange of correspondence with the young wife, about your mooncalf feelings for her at this time.

What you may feel about her is one thing; what you do about it is something else. Feelings may exist unbidden. Actions can be governed. Thus, while you probably can't change the quality of your feelings overnight, you certainly can direct your actions by the light of decency and common sense considerations.

It is axiomatic that emotions follows action. Therefore, if you behave with fidelity to your wife in this crisis, even courting her as gallantly as if you were falling in love with her for the first time (regardless of how you feel at present), meanwhile turning your back on the other woman, you will find eventually that her image is fading from your fancy. She will no longer be a temptation in the slightest.

IDA BAILEY ALLEN

New Tender-thin Noodles Replica Of Famous Dish

OUR TEST kitchen is a busy place, but often we take time out in the late afternoon to relax and visit with friends in many departments of the food field.

One recent afternoon we expected two representatives of a food manufacturer on the West Coast.

At five o'clock came a knock on the door and five men smiled their way in, along with a big carton filled with their new time-saving products, many made with a most appetizing combination of rice and small spaghetti pieces and containing packets of unusual seasonings.

NOODLE PRODUCT

The principal purpose was to demonstrate a new product just being nationally released — tender-thin noodles packaged with an envelope containing sauce seasonings and Romano and Parmesan cheese, which all five men enthusiastically claimed made the noodles an excellent replica of the famed Fettuccini Romana of Italy.

As far as the Chef and I are concerned, seeing and tasting are believing.

Out came the stop- watch. In went the noodles to cook.

NOODLES ROMANA FOR 4-6

1-2-3 Procedure

1. Start noodles to boil in 3 quarts boiling water with 1 tbsp. salt. Boil fast, 3 to 3½ minutes. Stir occasionally, don't over-cook.

2. Meantime heat ½ cup milk and 4 tbsp. butter or margarine in a small saucepan.

3. Drain noodles thoroughly. Turn into warm skillet that can go-to- table. Add hot milk; sprinkle in envelope of seasonings and cheese and toss as you would a salad.

"Preparation time, five minutes," announced our Chef.

Result — another high rating for a real time- saver with fine savor.

WHEN TO SERVE NOODLES A LA ROMANA

For a luncheon platter, surround with lightly panned Canadian bacon or panned smoked salmon or with grilled tomato halves and butter - panned shrimp or halved, hot, hard-cooked eggs.

For dinner, serve Noodles a la Romana with Veal Scallopini (made in five minutes) or with broiled chicken or grilled fillets of fish.

Our Chef's "Tossed Salad" By Request

Mesdames: This is the way they do it in France:

Cut a section of garlic in halves and rub the salad bowl with the cut side.

Into the bowl put six heaping cups of crisp salad greens — shredded lettuce plain or mixed with romaine or field salad.

Into the salad spoon measure one-fourth teaspoon dry mustard, one-half teaspoon salt and one-fourth teaspoon pepper. Fill with olive oil; stir to mix in the seasonings. Sprinkle over the salad.

Add two more tablespoons olive oil pouring it carefully over the salad.

Last, add slowly one tablespoon vinegar. Toss gently until blended.

There should be no visible liquid whatever left in the bottom of the salad bowl.
