

The Castaway's Dream.

[The following lines were written while looking on a picture called "The Castaway's Dream." Being a wanderer from home, the mind of the writer has often strayed back to the scenes of happy childhood, and seen in imagination those pleasant visions which gladden the heart of the poor Castaway.]

The scene is on the ocean,
The night is dark and drear,
A vessel's vainly trying,
A rock bound coast to clear;
The heaving billows rise and fall,
As on to doom she's sped;
And soon the wild waves requiem
Will sing o'er the silent dead.

She's nearing fast; her doom is sealed;
The rugged rocks are near,
And the men are grouped upon the deck
With faces blanched with fear.
At last there comes that awful sound,
The timber crash in twain,
And piercing shrieks are heard above
The roaring angry main.

The storm has now subsided,
The sea is calm once more;
And see, there are two objects
Upon the dreary shore.
One is a man; his hand is raised
To shade his piercing eye,
While on the sand beside him sleeps
A blue-eyed, rosy boy.

They have escaped a watery grave,
Perchance to starve and die,
And wish like that their comrades they,
Beneath the waves did lie.
But peacefully the "laddie" sleeps
As in a palace grand,
And the sea breeze fans his brow,
As it murmurs on the strand.

A smile is on his countenance,
As he dreams of happy home;
And in his visions he can see
The fields he oft did roam—
A mother, too, has come to meet
Her blue-eyed wandering boy,
And sisters, too, are hastening
To share the rapturous joy.

What pleasant hours he spends with them,
He tells—his wanderings o'er—
How great his perils oft have been
Upon some foreign shore;
No more a wanderer he will be,
To sail the stormy main,
But live at home, with kindred dear,
No more to part again.

Sleep on—sleep on! poor sailor boy—
This nothing but a dream;
But still 'tis well that visions bright
Across the mind do gleam;
But when the vision has passed by,
And he awakes once more,
He still will be a castaway,
Upon a dreary shore.

NOTICE.
THE Charlottetown Gas Light Company
have imported a fresh supply of Bray's
Patent Burners, especially made to consume only three feet of Gas per hour with the tap turned full on. These Burners are intended for use in Halls, Bedrooms, Kitchens, and other places where a light from a small consumption of Gas only is required.
By regulating the tap, the Gas consumed can be reduced to any desired quantity less than three feet per hour.
These Burners are so scientifically made that they will give a light equal to about ten candles at a cost of three quarters of one cent per hour.
The price of these Burners to consumers of Gas will be ten cents each. [Jun 10 eod pat
