Les Darcy; Tempting Target For A Rock-Tossing Public

Sir.—The man in the limelight makes a tempting target for those of us who are every ready to toss rocks at him for some not too well understood shortcoming. It isn't always true though that our unkind judgements are deserved. Take for example Les Darcy the fellow who was branded by the public in the first world war. Darcy was a prize fighter, an Australian who some thirty-five years ago was one of the outstanding middleweights of the world.

Back in his native land Darcy whipped all the good ones; fellows like Chip McGorty, Crouse and Murray. His skill soon excited the imagination of the American sports public and before long there was a great clamor to see Darcy in action in an American ring.

Those were war days however, and Darcy took a job as a deck hand on a tank steamer and shipped out of Australia bound for the U.S. As soon as he arrived on these shores he began to angle for a fight.

At about the same time there was another ringman in Europe named Georges Carpentier. Gorgeous George was an aviator, gay handsome fistic hero who had licked a lot of good men himself. With Darcy in the country looking for action the wily Tex Richard scenting a possible million-dollar attraction immediately went to work on what seemed to be a natural.

Once the two were matched the public mills began to grind overtime. The proposed fight steamed up much comment and ballyhoo. Involved such fantastic claims and so dazzled the public with tales of vast sums of money the fighters were to receive that soon questions began to be asked. How come Les Darcy was to receive so much money with his country fighting for its life in a great way? And why wasn't the Aussie in uniform anyhow?

It wasn't long before that ugly word of World War I began to be heard. The whisper started softly, rose in volume. "Slacker! Slacker! Darcy is a slacker!" Soon the cry was being shouted from the rooftops. Hate and hysteria poured like a flood from the lips of thousands of sport followers. The Australian was branded from coast to coast with the most insulting name given during wartime "slacker".

Everywhere he went to fight the local patriots attacked him. The abuse and ridicule all helped to crush Darcy. His world was shattered. He became at last a brooding, silent, bitter and beaten man. Nowhere in the States could he get a fight.

Then one night in Memphis, Tennessee, he came down with a slight cold. It wasn't a serious illness.
