Men and Women Make Marriage a Gamble

Dear Miss Dix—In marriage which has the better chance of getting the right mate, the man or the woman? Is marriage a gamble in which no one can tell beforehand what sort of a husband or wife a man or girl will make? E. L. T.

Answer:
I marriage is a gamble, it is because men and women make it so. Infatuated lovers refuse to do even a little amateur sleuthing into the characters and habits and backgrounds of those they are taking on for better or worse and thus fall to get the information that might save them from making the mistakes that wreck their lives.

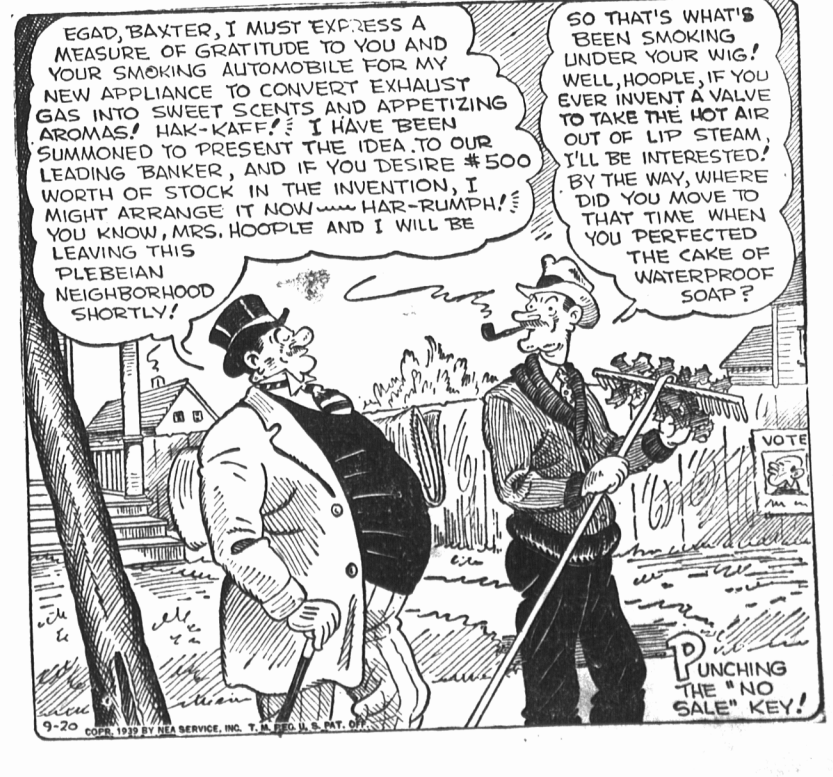

Very few women, and virtually no men, are good enough actors really to deceive a matrimonial candidate who is bent on getting the lowdown on their faults and foibles. When a man falls in love with a pretty girl he doesn't try to find out if she is amiable, industrious, saving and domestic. On the contrary, he thinks it cute for her to fly into rages. He is proud of her looking like a fashion plate and considers it a joke that she can't even order a dinner at a restaurant. Or he takes it as a matter of course that there is some magic in the marriage ceremony that will turn her into cooing dove instead of a spitfire, and make her willing to wear cheap clothes, and automatically make her into a good cook. He doesn't. And he blames his mistake in picking out a wife on marriage being a gamble. But it isn't. It is a sure thing. He could have got the wife he wanted if he had looked for her.

It is just exactly the same way with girls. They also blame luck when they lose out and their husbands turn out drunkards and loafers. But, as far as the proportion of good husbands and wives go, I think the sexes break about even. There are just as many good wives as good husbands, and bad wives as bad husbands.

What To Do With Spunging Relatives
Dear Dorothy Dix—My husband and I are a young married couple with a small income, but who would be very happy except for one problem. He has a great many relatives who are calling in on us for help and home and who take up all of our time on Sundays and holidays when we would like to be alone. How can we rid ourselves of this imposition and still remain friends with his family? MRS. K. P.

Answer:
I don't think you can, but it is better to have their ill will than to wreck your budget feeding them. You will never have enough nerve to say it, so why don't you write them nice notes and tell them that you enjoy having them for meals, but that you just can't afford it? DOROTHY DIX.
