Stresses W.I.

MANY HOMEMAKERS

"Probably there is a larger percentage of homemakers in our organization than in any other. What a responsibility then it is ours to have those homes happy and worthy of the name home.

"There are many more vital problems facing us than the next labour saving device. We must first of all ask ourselves, 'What kind of home do we want for our children? What is the role of the home in education? What is the effect of the so called modern home and type of discipline having on the problem of juvenile delinquency? Are working mothers having a good or bad effect on home life? How do problems of the aged affect our home life? 'Home life at its best is not a matter of means, it is a matter of feeling and engender it in our children then we have missed the boat no matter how well informed we are of the latest in automatic washing machines and deep freeze—important as these things may be in the cleanliness and feeding of our families.

FARM CHALLENGE

"Beyond the home, women's institute members think of their responsibility on the farm and the challenge facing us is there. Perhaps agriculture of all our industries is undergoing the most radical changes. 'The Women's Institutes of Canada hold a unique position as being an organization started with a rural background and continuing although there are many urbanized groups to voice the opinion of rural women. 'Food is the most vital need of all forms of life. At the recent session of the Agriculture Institute of Canada at Wolfville, N. S. Dr. Sen, Director General of F. A. O., said 'It is not a question of providing minimum necessities for a dignified human life for millions but a challenge of providing on a really adequate scale for a world population that is likely to be doubled by the turn of the century. 'The work of producing needed food as a means of livelihood is called farming and the combined forces of all business relating to farming in agriculture.

WOMEN AFFECTED

"Changes which have affected agriculture have affected the role of the woman in the home. Mother is even more valuable than she was in the days when she was called upon to perform many farm chores which are not necessary today. She must be a business woman and a student of farm economy. 'At a recent family farm panel discussion in U. S., one woman told the panel she is worth at least $68,000 to her husband basing her statement on a University of Minnesota study which pegged the value of farm wives at that figure. She went on to say she had very little patience with the woman who married the farmer but not the farm. 'Considering myself as an example I think that figure is a little high, but we who are farm women must make ourselves ever more valuable in studying scientific advances in agriculture, in understanding market problems and in making our opinions as producers and consumers felt. To me there will always be a rural viewpoint. No matter what changes come there will always be people who think along the broad lines of agriculture.

DAY SESSIONS

At the afternoon session of the Women's Institute Annual Convention yesterday Dr. J. A. MacMillan discussed the advantages and disadvantages of a national health insurance plan. Dr. MacMillan suggested that, before the Women's Institutes give their support to the plan, they should first see that 'the quality of hospital care under the hospital plan is better than that received now.' Dr. MacMillan outlined various

Uigg-Kinross W.I. Member Is Honored At Convention

One of the highlights of the evening session of the 45th annual convention of the P. E. I. Women's Institutes held at P. W. C. last night, was the presentation of a life membership to Mrs. W. E. MacKinnon, a member of the Uigg-Kinross branch.

The presentation was made by Mrs. Murdoch MacGowan, a past president of the P. E. I. Women's Institutes, assisted by Mrs. Lloyd Wilkie, current president of the organization.

British Gov't Announces Credit Squeeze Relaxed

LONDON (Reuters)—Britain's Conservative government announced a major relaxation of its credit squeeze Thursday to encourage business expansion. The squeeze made bank loans hard to get. Derick Heathcoat Amory, chancellor of the exchequer, told the House of Commons that after the end of this month he would not have to ask bankers to hold down their loan totals to any set figure. Amory also announced other technical moves that will make it easier for companies to obtain money for new projects. "We are determined to return to inflationary conditions. But it is clearly right to encourage such sound development as we judge to be within our capacity. That is the main purpose of these measures." RIVAL VIEWS Conservative members of the House cheered as he added: "The fact that these relaxations can now safely be made is a tribute to the success of the government's economic policy." Harold Wilson, the Labor party's financial spokesman, reported he was glad the government was "responding to our pressure for recognition that the problem the country is facing is not inflation but recession."

Wilson said British industry was operating so far below capacity that the easing of the credit squeeze was "largely a meaningless gesture."

Wilson said British industry was operating so far below capacity that the easing of the credit squeeze was "largely a meaningless gesture." Some financial observers interpreted Thursday's announcement as designed to show on the one hand that the government had not forgotten the danger of inflation and on the other, that it did not fear a world slump calling for an end to all controls. The government's new moves will make it easier for industrialists to borrow money for plant expansion and also will enable the average Briton to obtain a loan more easily.
