The home circulation is the most valuable for

Beyond.
It seems such a little way to me Across to that strange country, the Beyond.
And yet not strange, for it has grown to be
The home of those of whom I am so fond.
They make it seem familiar and most dear.
As journeying friends bring distant countries near.
So close it lies that when my sight is clear
I think I see the gleaming strand; I know I feel that those who've gone from here Come near enough to touch my hand;
I often think, but for my veiled eyes,
We should find Heaven right round us lies.

I cannot make it seem a day to dread When to this dear earth I shall return To that still dearer country of the dead,
And join the lost ones so long dreamed about.
I love this world, yet shall I love to go And meet the friends who wait for me, I know.
And so for me there is no sting to death,
And so the grave has lost its victory;
It is but crossing with a bated breath And white, set face, a little strip of sea,
To find the loved ones waiting on the shore.
More beautiful, more precious than before.
—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

ONLY A BOUNDARY RIDER.

It was only a station hand. Where he came from, or why he came there, of course nobody knew—that is, considering the fact that he was the commonest of all on a back country run in Queensland. To look at, indeed, he had something to recommend himself. Straight, active and manly-looking, —there was not a hand on the station who could ride a horse better than Jim. Jim what? You might have been disposed to ask—but that was just what he was right, or at least he knew. Jim was plenty, when Jim was only a boundary rider on the Mulla-Nulla Run.

It was as Jim that he had joined and was entered on the overseer's book and as Jim he had worked there for at least a twelve month without anybody ever asking whether he owned another name or not. Mulla-Nulla Run is well known in Middle Queensland. It is rather a large one, and carries more stock for its size than any other in the district. When Jim was there perhaps 20,000 head of cattle were depastured in its broad valleys and on its grassy downs, and there were about twenty-five hands besides the overseer and his assistants.
The owner, Mr. Leslie of Mulla-Nulla, lived there when he was at home, though, being a member of Parliament, a leading politician, he was a good deal away in Brisbane with his family.

It was a good place to live, too. The house—long, low and substantial—was built half way up the slope between the creek and the wooded range. It faced the west and from the verandah you looked out as far as the eye could see over the open plains, toward the setting sun. Miles upon miles of grassy plain, with here and there a shallow bottom where the pale Minnacas waved their thin feathery foliage and soft lilac flowers over the bed of the little winter stream that remained green so long through the fiery heat of the long, bright summer months.
Miles upon miles—green as emerald after the rains—yellow as gold when the summer heat was still but a month or two old—brown as russet through the long hot months from December to April.

Many a glance Jim had cast at the house, lying nestled on the breast of the hill, half hidden in its fruit trees and shrubberies, only glimpses of its green-shaded windows and deep verandah, draped with its gorgeous flowering creepers, visible through the cold mist. In front, sloping to the stream, terrace after terrace, clothed with vines that spread their broad leaves tenderly over the great bunches of their white and purple grapes. Jim could admire the place to his heart's content, but from a distance only, for though Mr. Leslie was a popular man with his hands, his friendliness didn't extend past his family.

Yet Jim met the girls every now and then, as they rode with their father or brother, and more than once it had been his luck to see them near at hand—so close, indeed, that in his own mind he had settled which was the elder of the two. It hadn't taken him long to decide which was the prettier, and there could hardly be two opinions that he was right, for Maudie Leslie was a strikingly handsome girl.
Yet, strange to say, it was another face that came back with strange persistence to Jim, on his long, solitary rides, —other eyes than those of the belle of Brisbane that shone upon him in the still hours of the night in his lonely hut on the outlying boundary.

It would be rash to say what and how much a girl observed of what concerns herself. Perhaps it was not in Jim's mind at all that a face—only a face—unconnected with language, either spoken or written, appeared and reappeared at unbidden moments—who can say? There was something after all uncommon about Jim, as he sat his horse fireily with the ease of a centaur, and doffed his broad-brimmed cabbage tree hat to the passing girls—something engaging in the frankness of his look of respectful admiration which would be cast momentarily on one or two of the Leslie girls whenever they came to meet.

It was on a Friday night that it happened. It might have occurred on any other day of the week, although to this day Miss Leslie is of a different opinion. Jim was out on the Death's Valley Boundary that day, and luck would have it, and young Leslie and his sisters took their ride in the same direction. It may be that Jim's mind was running on the bright, dark face, with the eyes that glanced so quickly at him as he raised his hat in passing, but whatever the reason may have been, he took no notice of the weather till he suddenly found himself face to face with an Australian thunderstorm.

Why Contemplate Suicide.

It is like tempting Providence for con-sumptives to ignore the remarkable remedy known as Miller's Emulsion of Norwegian Cod Liver Oil. For any person to die of consumption without trying this remarkable fish and blood maker, after knowing of its existence, is suicide pure and simple.
All that the consumptive patient needs is new blood with which to battle against the destructive forces of the disease. Miller's Emulsion provides new blood in abundance. It is a combination of Norwegian Oil and hypophosphites of lime and soda—a triumph of science.
Emulsion is the great nerve strengthener and blood maker, and cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Scroph-ula and all lung affections. In Big Bottles, 50c. and $1, at all Drug Stores.

Advertisers!

The home circulation is the most valuable for advertisers. THE EXAMINER reaches the homes of our citizens every evening. That accounts for our large advertising patronage.

A blinding flash, a deafening roar, a sudden fierce splash of blinding rain, like the discharge of a water-pump—and the storm was upon him. To make for cover was his first instinct, and at any rate his horse refused to stand. In a minute he had turned and was galloping back in the direction of the boundary hut at the foot of the Death's Valley range. With flash and groan and roar, the storm swept after him, but it was the horse rather than the rider, that seemed to feel it. Jim indeed was resigned, for there was no escape from the rain, which came down with such a hiss on the tangles of the dull golden brown grass that lay matted under foot, and by this time he was too well accustomed to this mood of Queensland nature to feel nervous about the jagged streams of steel-blue light that ran and flickered around him.

As Jim turned into the boundary hut he was startled by the sound of the long, shrill wail of the native Coo-ee-ee, which rang out strange and wild through the dull splash of the falling rain. It seemed to come from the bark door, and Jim, who had partly, then, had been caught in the storm, it was awakened, no doubt, but at least he would make his acquaintance with another minute. He had rounded the bend in the gully, and once more that cry, so wild and despairing, met him as he turned. It was strange and alarming, and as he seered through the swirling mist of the falling water, he could just make out moving figures in the uncertain light.

"Tracks!" he put spurs to his horse and sprang forward. Yes, but a few yards on and the dark, lithe form of a native, spear in hand, seemed to melt out of his path, and something passed him with a sharp swish, so close that involuntarily he stopped his head. In another moment he had reached the hut, and as he leaped to the ground he saw many dusky forms disappearing behind the veil of blinding mist.

A glad cry of relief welcomed his arrival, and the rough bark door of the hut was thrown open. With a decision Jim plucked off the bridle and struck the horse sharply with the stockwhip in his hand. Fireily threw up his head and indignantly neighed and peered into the storm. Then Jim stepped quickly inside the door. He had been right—there they were. There, but in evil case. On the floor, half propped against the wall of the hut, half leaning against his younger sister's shoulder, lay young Leslie, the first victim of the murderous attack of the natives. The slight shaft of the spear which had pierced his side lay on the ground beside him, while his half-glazed eyes looked up anxiously at the newcomer, as if to say, "What is that?"

Jim stepped forward, and he whispered huskily. Jim stooped and looked at it. "I don't know that it's safe," he said. "Now, now," whispered the feeble voice, more huskily yet. "It's not so bad as it looks. I Jim shook his head, then glanced a question at his sister. "Do what he asks, please," she said in a low tone.
Jim drew out the spear, and he so something struck the slight door and the sharp head and most of the shaft of spear came through.

There was a shriek—it came from the other side of the walled enclosure, an agony of fear against the opposite wall of the hut. Jim gathered up the coils of his stock whip and grasped the short loaded end of the whip, and whispered huskily. Jim stooped and
safe," he said. "Now, now," whispered the feeble voice, more huskily
yet. "It's not so bad as it looks. I

shaft of spear came through.

ANOTHER DISCOVERY.
Of Interest to Bicycle Riders.

A well known bicycle rider has made a discovery that will be good news to all who locomote on the wheel. He says:
"Since I first began to ride a wheel, which is several years ago, I have been subject to more or less chafing and irritation. Sometimes when heated the itching inside my legs would be so severe that I would feel compelled to forego for a time. Nothing that I tried did any material good until my attention was drawn to an advertisement of Dr. Chase's Ointment for all itching of the skin. I tried it and almost from the moment it touched the skin the itching stopped. I also find its occasional use prevents chafing.
Further evidence of the efficacy of this preparation is given by Clas. Roe, foreman Central Press Agency, Toronto, who was troubled with Itching Skin of the most aggravated kind. When the ointment was first applied, he was too much itching, would wake up with absolute pain from digging into the flesh with his nails. Chase's Ointment gave relief from the first application and permanently cured. Price 60c."
