WOOD'S PHOSPHORINE

The Great English Remedy. Is the result of over 50 years treating thousands of cases with all known drugs, until at last we have discovered the true remedy and treatment—a combination that will effect a prompt and permanent cure in all stages of Scrophulous, Ulcer, or Excess, Nervous Weakness, Emaciation, Mental Worry, Excessive Use of Opium, Tobacco, or Alcoholic Stimulants, all of which soon lead to Insanity, Consumption and an early grave.

Wood's Phosphorine is sold by responsible wholesale and retail druggists in the Dominion.

THOUGHTS FROM DUMAS.

To make friends with a man requires time, with a woman, only occasion.

Experience and philosophy that do not result in forbearance and charity are two acquisitions that are not worth their cost.

A well-bred woman does not fall in love a second time without allowing a considerable interval to elapse. There are never two accidents in close succession on the same railroad.

It is with science and philosophy in their search after truth as with railway trains passing through a tunnel in broad daylight—darkness in the middle, but day is at both ends. Whichever side we go out it is in the same light in which we entered.

The same God is at the beginning of faith and at the end of science.

A woman has no power to efface radically by the sole effort of the will an image that has long filled the mind. She must replace it by another. She does not destroy the superfluous. When the second image is finer or larger than the first, all that the first is seen more, all goes well, this is forgiveness. When it is smaller than that of the other can be seen, things go badly; that is remorse.

"BUT I'M NOT MARRIED JUST NOW." wasn't able till now to remember what happened. But the ruby was on my mind and the first thing I did was to hunt in my pocket for it, and there it was all safe.

I tried to get it in my mouth, but for some reason I couldn't understand—it was the size of course—it wouldn't go in.

"Well," said the surgeon, regarding him with mingled perplexity and interest.

"Then I thought I was standing in front of a safe in my vault," Meryon went on, "and I was being hunted by thieves who wanted to get the ruby from me. The safe wouldn't open. I felt all over in the dark to find an opening; at last I found one—a small hole in the upper part—when I touched it, something sharp came through, and gave me a job so that I yelled with pain. But the thieves were close up by that time, and my only chance was to get the ruby through that hole, if I did for it. So just as they appeared, I made a desperate effort, and crammed it in; and got a job that sent me off unconscious again. The next thing I knew—however 'that's no matter. The ruby is in that hole."

"What does the boy mean?" said Chase impressed by the force and vividness with which the tale was told.

"I understand him," interposed the prince, gravely. "The stone is in his shoulder. Allah is great!"

"I wish some of your brains would get into Horace's skull," sighed Meryon, relaxing on his cushions.

"He is a nice fellow," said Meryon, "and had no other, he was forced to spare him. He sent however, for the father of Terah, whoever he might be.

The younger leapt up, he used to be a gardener in the service of the harem, and that he had died a natural and easy death only a week before.

Here truly was a maddening state of things; four implements missed one after another, and Hatpaha and Meryon also out of reach. Some one must be slaughtered, and at once; but whom? No one who had offended the prince could be got at, and nobody who could be got at would offend him. His highness' wrath, which had been kindled up for eight hours, now attained the temperature of super-heated steam, and the boiler exploded.

In other words, this great and worthy potentate expired of an apoplexy in the midst of his trembling couriers, who instantly, with hosannas of joy, prostrated themselves at the feet of the astonished Ebal and proclaimed him their ruler.

CHAPTER VI. By the time Meryon, Chase and the others arrived, the young monarch was well settled on his throne, and was showing himself a brave, skilled and merciful administrator. He welcomed the artists with heartfelt joy, and they told all their adventures to each other. Meryon was given a suite of rooms next to the prince's own, and they were always together.

Chase in the chair as moderator. The prince expressed regret at the miscarriage of the Terah affair. He had no better substitute to offer than Senuah, who was his half-sister by another mother and Terah's father—a rather obscure and roundabout relationship.

"She's a nice girl," said Meryon, "and her birth would be no obstacle; but I'm not marrying just now."

"We haven't got any airtight barrels in the states yet," commented Chase; "but we may come to it later."

"I still shall hope to visit you sometime in New York," said his highness, "and see the white house and the ward politicians and the other things. Meantime, the misfortune that keeps you on this divan is my gain, for it compels you to stay with me."

"You must thank Chase," replied Meryon, with a moody grin; "he won't treat it as I advise."

"The man imagines that the bullet is still in the wound," Chase explained. "His real trouble is the block of wood in his head, which will come away only with the head itself."

"I wish I were as sure of the whereabouts of the holly ruby as of that bullet," Meryon observed; and, having said this, he shut his eyes as if intending a nap.

In fact, he remained motionless and seemingly asleep for about twenty minutes during which the prince and the surgeon conversed in low tones and smoked their narghiles.

Then Meryon opened his eyes and fixed them upon Chase, with a strange expression.

"Horace," said he, in a husky voice, "something queer has happened. I've been back in that cell in the big rock, and saw myself there as I was when these fellows threw me in. I saw all I did while I was in there—and I know what became of the ruby!"

"Oh! that it is!" interposed Chase. (THE END.)

THE FROSTED PANES.

One night came Winter noiselessly, and leaped in deep stillness of his heart convened The ghosts of all his slain.

Leaves and ephemerata, and stars of earth, And fugitives of grass— White spirits loosed from bonds of mortal birth.

He drew them on the glass. —C. G. D. Roberts in Atlantic Monthly.

Lacking the Authority. "I was sorry, Willie," said his Sunday-school teacher, to see you keep your seat when the superintendent asked those who wanted to go to heaven to rise. Don't you want to go to heaven?"

"Yes, sir," answered the barber. "But why didn't you rise?"

"Cos he didn't have no right to tell me to rise, ma'am," answered Willie. "He ain't no angel Gabriel."

ODDS AND ENDS.

A Walkerville, Mont., woman cleaned up $1 worth of gold from the claws of three chickens a few days ago. She is undecided whether to kill the rest of her flock, or to try and find out where they scratch up the gold.

Cured of Chronic Catarrh. A Remarkable Cure—J. W. Jenkinson, Gilford, spent between $200 and $300 in consulting doctors; tried Dixon's and all other treatments, but got no benefit. One box of Chase's Catarrh Cure did more good than all other remedies, in fact, I consider myself cured, and with a 25-cent box at that.

Gen. Ruise reports that he had an encounter with 300 rebels in the province of Havana. The rebel loss was 21 killed, 400 wounded. The troops sustained no loss. It is unofficially reported that Col. Echavarez captured insurgent camps near Pazaral and the rebels lost fifty killed. The troops destroyed goods valued at $200,000.

Cured Weak Back for 25 Cents. For two years I was dosed, pilled and plastered for weak back, scalding urine and constipation, without benefit. One box of Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills cured me. Three boxes cured. R. J. Smith, Toronto. One pill a dose, price 25 cents.

A French syndicate of Egyptian bond-holders has decided to institute action before the Egyptian mixed tribunal against the Egyptian public debt commission in opposition to the decision of that body to authorize the use of any part of the Egyptian reserve fund for the purpose of defraying the cost of the Dongola expedition.

Catarrh Cured for 25 Cts. Neglect cold in the head and eye will surely have catarrh. Neglect nasal catarrh and you will surely induce pulmonary diseases or catarrh of the stomach, with its disgusting attendants, foul breath, hawking, spitting, blowing, etc. Stop it by using Dr. Chase's Catarrh Cure, 25 cents a box cures. A perfect blooder enclosed with each box.
