

THE FAIR GOD.

BOOK SEVEN.

CHAPTER X.

THE WAY THROUGH THE WALL.

At Templo, at Templo! to the temple! shouted Cortes, as he charged the close ranks of the enemy.

"At Templo!" answered the cavaliers, plunging forward in chivalric rivalry.

And from the column behind them rolled the hoarse echo, with the words of command superadded:

"At Templo! Adelante, adelante! forward!" Not a Spaniard there but felt the inspiration of the cry; felt himself a soldier of Christ, marching to a battle of the gods, the true against the false; yet the way was hard, harder than ever; so much so, indeed, that the moon came before Cortes at last spurred into the space in front of the old palace.

The first object to claim attention there was the temple against which the bigotry of the Christians had been so suddenly and shrewdly directed—shrewdly, because in the glory of its conquest the failure of the moctezuma was certain to be forgotten. In such intervals of the fight as he could snatch, the leader measured the pile with a view to the attack. Standing in his stirrups, he traced out the path to its summit, beginning at the gate of the coatlpanthi, then up the broad stairs, and around the four terraces to the cozcozco—a distance of nearly a mile, the whole crowded with warriors, whose splendid regalia published them lords and men of note, in arms to die, if need be, for glory and the gods. As he looked, Sandoval rode to him.

"Turn thine eyes hither, Senor—to the palace, the palace!"

Cortes dropped back into his saddle, and glanced that way.

"By the Mother of Christ, they have broken through the wall!"

He checked his horse.

"Escobar," he said, calmly, through his half-raised visor, "take thou one hundred men, the best in the column, and attack the temple. Hearst thou? Kill all thou findest! Nay, I recollect it is a people with two heads, of which I have but one. Bring me the other, if thou canst find him. I mean the butcher they call the high priest. And more, Senor Alonso: when thou hast taken the idolatrous mountain, burn the towers, and fear not to tumble the bloody gods in the square. Thy battle will be glorious. On thy side God, the Son, and Mother! Thou canst not fail."

"And thou, Oles," he added to another, "get thee down the street, and hasten Messa and his supports. Tell them the infidels are at the door of the palace, and that the captain Cristobal hath sworn every man to lift his axe. And further—as speed is everything now—bid Oles and with the gun, and fire the moctezuma, which hath done its work. Spare not thy horse!"

With the last word, Cortes shut his visor, and, gripping his axe, spurred to the front, shouting:

"To the palace, gentlemen! for love of Christ and good comrades. Rescue, rescue!"

Down the column sped the word then forward resistlessly, through the embattled gate, into the enclosure; and none too soon, for, as Cortes had said, though at the time witness of the truth, the Aztecs were threatening the very doors of the palace.

Escobar, elated with the task assigned him, arranged his men, and made ready for the assault. The infidels beheld his preparations with astonishment. All eyes, therefore bent upon the conflict in the palace yard, now fixed upon the little band so boldly proposing to scale the sacred heights. A cry came up the street: "the 'tzin, the 'tzin!" then the 'tzin himself came; and as he passed through the gate of the coatlpanthi, the thousands recognized him, and breathed freely. "The 'tzin has come! The gods are safe!" so they cheered each other.

The good captain led his men to the gate of the coatlpanthi.

With difficulty he gained entrance. As if to madden the infidels, already fired by a zeal as great as his own, the dismal thunder of the great drum of Huizil rolled down from the temple, overwhelming all other sounds. Slowly he penetrated the enclosure; closely his command followed him; yet not all of them; before he reached the stairway he was fighting for, the hundred were but ninety.

Twenty minutes—thirty: at last Escobar set his foot on the first step of the ascent. There he stopped; a shield of iron dished against his helmet rang with a deadly blow. When he saw light again he was outside the sacred wall, borne away by his retreating countrymen, of whom not one entered the palace unscathed.

Cortes, meantime, with sword and axe, cleared the palace of assailants; and, as if the day's work were done, he prepared to dismount. Don Cristobal, holding his stirrup, said:

"Oerto, Senor! thou art welcome. I do indeed kiss thy hand. I thank thee."

"Not so, captain, not so. By my conscience, we are the debtors! I will hear nothing else. It is true we came not a moment too soon—he glanced at the breach in the wall, and shook his head gravely—"but—I speak what may not be gainsaid—thou has saved the palace."

More he would have said in the same strain, but that a sentinel on the roof cried out:

"Ota, Senor!"

"What wouldst thou?" asked Cortes, quickly.

"I am an old soldier, Senor Hernan—" "To the purposes, varlet, to the purpose!" "—whom much experience hath taught not to express himself hastily; therefore, if thy orders were well done, Senor, whither would our comrades over the way be going?"

"To the top of the temple," said Cortes, gravely, while all around him laughed.

"Then I may say safely, Senor, that they will go round the world before they arrive there. They come this way fast as men can have to—"

A long, exulting cry from the infidels cut the speech short; and the party, turning to the temple, saw it alive with waving sashes and tossing shields.

"To the horse, gentlemen!" said Cortes, quietly, but with flashing eyes. "Satan has ruled you pile long enough. I will now tilt with him. Let the trumpets be sounded! Muster the army! God's service has become our necessity. Haste ye!"

Out of the gate, opened to receive Escobar and his bruised followers, marched three hundred chosen Christians, with as many thousand Tlascalans. In their midst went Olmedo under his gown a suit of armor, in his hand a lance, and on that a brazen crucifix. Other ensign there was not. Cortes and his cavalry led the column, which was of all the arms except artillery; that remained with De Olid to take care of the palace.

And never was precaution more timely; for hardly had the gate closed upon the outgoers, before the good captain sent his garrison to the walls, once more menaced by the infidels.
