BURGESS BEDTIME STORIES

(By Thornton W. Burgess)

OLD IGGY HAS A FEELING

Age is Wisdom's elder brother; Seldom one without the other. —Old Mother Nature.

Old Iggy, biggest of all the Iguanas in that part of the jungle down in the Land-of-always-summer where Farmer Brown's boy was spending the winter with a friend, was big because he was old, and old because he was wise. Age and wisdom grow together. The great Lizard, for you know Iguanas belong to the Lizard family, looking down from high in a tree, saw Tommy and his friend looking up at him and knew they saw him. How did he know? Perhaps he read it in their faces. Perhaps it was because Tommy pointed up at him. Perhaps it was because he had been stealing chickens, and folks who have been doing things they should not do always have the feeling that they are being seen. And perhaps it was just a warning from Old Mother Nature. Anyway he knew. Old Iggy didn't move. He watched the two boys talking together. Of course even if he could have heard what they were saying, he wouldn't have understood. And that was just as well. He wouldn't have felt any easier if he could have heard and understood.

Old Iggy didn't move

"So you think he is your chicken thief," said Tommy. "I don't just think it; I know it," replied the other.

"Well, what are you going to do about it?" asked Tommy. "I am going into the house for my gun. I hate to shoot the old fellow, but I can't afford to lose any more of my chickens," said the other.

"Probably he thinks he has just as much right to them as you have," said Tommy.

"Probably he does, but that is his hard luck. Now you keep watch of him while I go for my gun. Old Iggy has lived long enough. I hate to do it, as I said before, but I hate even more to lose my chickens. So keep watch of him. Don't let him get out of your sight." With this, his friend ran back to the house for his gun, leaving Tommy to watch Old Iggy.

He stared up at the great Lizard. Old Iggy stared down at Tommy. "It is too bad to kill the old fellow even if he is nothing but a big Lizard," thought Tommy. "To have lived to be as big and old as he is he must have been smart. It is too bad that he isn't smart enough to know that he should leave chickens alone. Yes, sir, it is too bad. I don't believe he thinks he is stealing. Of course he doesn't. To him those chickens are for any one smart enough to get them. It is the law of the Green Forest and all the great outdoor world that only those smart enough to look out for themselves shall live. So to him he has as much right to those chickens as anyone else."

Old Iggy, staring down with unblinking eyes, was doing some thinking too. "I have a feeling it is time for me to be moving," thought he. "I hate to leave those chickens, but it is time for me to get out of this neighborhood. I don't trust those two-legged folks."

Contract Bridge

By Josephine Culbertson

MAKING AN ERROR POSSIBLE

The supreme virtue of East's first play in the following deal was that it gave his adversary the chance to go wrong.

North dealer.

North-South vulnerable

♠ A J	♥ K 9 6
♦ 7 5 3	♠ 10 9
♣ 6 3 2	♥ K Q 10 7
♠ A Q J 8	♦ 5
♥ 7 5 4 3	♣ K 7 4
♥ A 8 4 2
♦ 9 8 1
♣ 6 2

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1♠	1♥	2NT	Pass
5NT	Pass	Pass	Pass

From West's point of view it was discouraging that his partner's diamond bid had been overcalled by South with two notrump, but any opening lead except a diamond looked hopeless, so West led the nine.

East did not do as so many players would in his position — he did not play the queen. Instead, he simply put in the encouraging seven-spot — and, as it happened, South fell into the trap. He had to win with the jack, but then he decided to knock out the ace of hearts. West led his remaining diamond, and now of course East overtook to be sure that South's last stopper would be knocked out. Now South had to depend on the club finesse, but East had that suit under excellent control, and when he got in with the club king he rattled off the rest of his diamonds.

It is easy to see that if South, after winning the first trick with the diamond jack, had cleared the club suit, East would not have made any diamond tricks! This possible outcome, however, does not detract from the excellence of East's first-trick ducking play! If he had put up the diamond queen, declarer would have had to be a very bad player to go wrong! Common prudence would have told South to let East hold the first trick with his diamond queen — and after that, successful defense would be out of the question.
