

made the Examiner, and not the Islander, during the period of Mr. Holl's Government, the organ of his own opinions.

Maclean is much in the practice of alluding to our "news-paper speculations," and particularly to the Palladium, which, he says, failed through the "indolence and improvidence" of the publisher. Maclean's mere assertion regarding any occurrence can never be taken as conclusive by those who know him. The miser regards every expenditure as "improvident" beyond what suffices to sustain a merely animal existence; and it is quite possible that if the publisher of the Palladium had as niggard a soul as Duncan Maclean he might have scraped together a few more shillings, and deferred the suspension of his journal. But we are clearly of opinion that nothing tended so much to bring about the suspension of that paper as the writings of Maclean himself, who was its principal correspondent, of whose character we were entirely ignorant, and whose onslaughts upon private individuals were so furious that we were obliged to commit more of his manuscripts to the fire than ever went through the printer's hands. As it was, during the year and a half the Palladium was published, a large amount of work was done for Maclean in the shape of copying his communications for the press—for not one compositor in ten could read them—for all of which work he never paid one shilling, besides furnishing him, during the whole time we had the misfortune to be pestered with his letters, with files of foreign and colonial papers, which cost us many pounds, and towards which he paid not one farthing.

But let us see if we cannot say something about others' "failures" as well as our own. Maclean himself failed in public life, but his failure was owing, not to the mild and pardonable sins of "indolence and improvidence," but to the flagrant vices of fraud and treachery and deception. John Ings commenced the Islander in 1842 with a mere handful of nearly worn out types and a second-hand press, which he wheeled out of the late J. H. White, and for which we are told he has never yet paid a shilling. He is a pretty fellow, certainly, to publish reflections about the "newspaper speculators" of others? But we are not done with him. In 1843 this same John Ings, whose editor affects to look down upon every other publication but his own, was so immensely prosperous in his own "speculation" that he got the land proprietors and their agents to hawk about a begging letter, soliciting contributions for the support of the Islander. This letter was reprinted some years ago in the Morning News, and can be easily referred to. But has the fellow prospered so wonderfully since, that he can afford to cast reflections on the past career of others? Let us see. He began a little paper called the Express, three different times, which he sold for a penny a piece in the market. But after a few weeks of each trial, the thing had to be dropped, for the country people began to discover the character of the publication, and refused to throw away their pennies upon it. Well, how fares the Islander—has it prospered so immensely, too, that its editor may, with impunity, throw reflections upon others? Only a short time ago, we heard a gentleman declare that he had been paying three or four pounds a year, independent of his subscription to the Islander, towards paying Maclean's salary, but that he would do so no longer. We have abundant proof that Maclean is paid in that way. Can the Islander establishment, then, be in such a high state of prosperity, when the wages of its editor have to be squeezed out of the charity of its patrons? But what became of the Constitutionalist? Did it "fail" through the "indolence and improvidence" of its publisher? No—it received its death-blow at the hands of Duncan Maclean, for he wrote it out of existence. And what became of the Colonial Herald, and a score of other newspapers, that sprung into life, and fettered their little hour on the stage during the past twenty years? Did they also "fail" through "improvidence and indolence" on the part of their publishers?

It is a very bad thing, in the opinion of Duncan Maclean, for a "newspaper speculation" to fail; but we suppose it is highly grieved and proper for any other kind of business to "fail." Let us take a look through the streets of Charlot-town, and see how many Tory "merchants," as they call themselves, have gone to ruin within the last eight or ten years—why, there is one in particular who never commenced any kind of business yet, without failing in it; and there are many of his class, of the same school of politics—who would not be able to pay three and four-pence in the pound if their affairs were wound up, and they are yet ready to cry out with Duncan Maclean that the "Snatchers" are all "penniless paupers." These "opulent" merchants who can afford to sneer at others about "poverty," and take the money that ought to go to their creditors to pay a blackguard for doing so in print—are all very small fry, indeed, but small as they are it may not be amiss, by-and-by, to roast a few of them as an example to others.

We ought, and we do sincerely apologise to our readers for detaining their attention so long upon matters which have so much reference to ourselves and our petty affairs. We do not often offend in this way, and we think we may rely upon their indulgence for the present. We have not written in reply because Duncan Maclean has done us any hurt.—God bless the mark!—a fellow who left a neighbouring Colony in disgrace, where, we have been informed, one of his last acts was the perpetration of a felony, and signalized his advent here by blasphemy and sedition—the sentence of the law for the latter still hanging over his guilty head—cannot well be supposed capable of injuring the reputation of any man by the use of his infamous pen. We have written these two columns, because writing is to us a pleasant exercise, and by indulging in it, we keep in remembrance many interesting facts about our political adversaries. But let Duncan now blaze away at us for the next three months, and send memorials to the Colonial Office and the Governor about us, for we mean to be provokingly "indolent" so far as replying to him is concerned.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Thomas Dougan."—We have, we confess it with grief, been so wasteful of our time as to read the long rigmarole, bearing your signature, addressed to "the editor of the Examiner," as well as to the other editors. As it chiefly concerns the Hon. Mr. Mooney, we leave that gentleman to answer for himself. If you thought we would copy the letter into this paper, you were very much mistaken, notwithstanding the interesting fact in its favor, that it emanated from the pen of Mr. Abercrombie Willock. We are glad our old friend, Abercrombie, has shown so much sense as not to father the production, for the worst of his thousand and one speeches in the streets of Charlot-town, at certain hours of the night, under certain influences, would make more tolerable reading, if reported, than the lengthy tirade which he has given to the public as your production, Thomas Dougan.

UNITED STATES.

HARVEST PROSPECTS OF THE UNITED STATES.—The United States Economist says:—All accounts agree that the breadth of land under crop throughout the farming districts is larger than ever before, and the efforts of the planters to add to the food supplies of the country have been thus far seconded by favorable seasons. The season is now so far advanced as to preclude a recurrence of the damage from frost which last year overtook considerable quantities of food. The unusual wet of the Spring of 1854, which made planting very backward, was succeeded by an unusual drought. The present Spring has been generally fine, and the Summer promises to be genial. Under these circumstances hopes of large supplies of farm produce are not unreasonably indulged in. Should this prove to be the case, the farming interests will experience a year of greater prosperity than they have ever enjoyed before, since the prospective demands for their produce, as well as home as abroad, are a guarantee that prices far above the average will be commanded for all that can be raised."

NEW YORK, May 23.—A bottle was picked up last Sunday, on Sandy Hook, containing a letter purporting to be written by John Edmondson, supercargo of the British Brig Edwin, Captain Stillwater, bound from Havana to London, stating that the said Brig was captured by a piratical Schooner, called the Saamrook, on the 18th of March, all hands except himself were murdered, and the vessel burned, having been riddled of all her valuables. The letter is dated on board the Saamrook, lat. 33, lon. 68.

LOSS OF SPECIES AT SEA.—The Barque William T. Sayward, Hedges, from San Francisco for Shanghai, with 1,000 bbls. of flour and $160,000 in specie, was abandoned near the Ladrone Islands, lately. This vessel was formerly owned in Boston, but there is no insurance on either vessel or cargo up to the present time, in this city.—Bost. Atlas.

TORNADO.—The Detroit Times tells of a tornado which recently passed over the counties of Washtenaw and Jackson, Mich., unroofing houses and barns, killing cattle, &c. Among other damage, it is mentioned that the water of a small lake was blown entirely out of its bed!

The State of Maine says the lumbering business promises to be very active during the ensuing year.

Much excitement exists in the City of Portland, Maine, in consequence of an assault by an armed force upon a crowd of unoffending persons. It appears that Neal Dow, Mayor of Portland, imported $1600 worth of liquor on his own responsibility, intending to sell it to the City, which, it appears was contrary to law, as the agent is the only authorized person to buy and sell the article. On Saturday last, a complaint was made against him, but Mr. Dow called the Aldermen together and obtained their sanction for the course he had pursued. In the evening, a crowd assembled about the City Rum Shop, and created some noise, when they were fired upon in a most unjustifiable manner, and several innocent persons shot. The Portland papers are very severe upon the Mayor and if they state the whole truth, Neal Dow is highly culpable.

A meeting of the citizens was held on Monday last, when a committee was appointed to investigate and prosecute the charge against the authorities, and to request the Mayor to resign his office.

A London paper states that the floating tonnage of the world, excluding only China and the East, is 135,000 vessels, of 15,500,000 tons. The number of seamen is 800,000, and including the maritime population of the whole world there must be at least a million of persons engaged at sea.
