

An Adventure with a Burglar.

I went to Covent Garden Theatre one night last season. We were out at twelve, and set off to my lodgings. I knocked; there was no answer. I knocked again; a window was thrown up, and my landlady's head appeared. "Who are you?" she screamed. "Let's in please; it's me!" I answered.

"Then Mr. Me, if you don't come home before ten, you may stay out till mornin'." I never wait up for my lodgers—my door is closed at ten; and then the window closed with a bang.

"No go!" thinks I. "I have no money. I'll go to a railway station, and wait in the waiting-room till morning;" which resolution proceeded to carry out by walking friskily for the Bank.

I turned into Moorgate-street, and was just thinking whether I should go to the London, Brighton, and South Coast or the London bridge station. I stopped to shop. There was a confectioner's shop just in front of me. Oh, that it were open! I had three-pence left.

Just at this moment a tall, broad-shouldered man came up to me, and viewed me from top to toe. I looked at him. He was dressed in dark clothes; a pea jacket, and clap-trip cloth hat, with a peak lying level on the forehead, gave me a feeling of awe. The thought forced itself upon me that it was a garrotter. He spoke first.

"You're Mr. Sam?" and he laid his finger on his nose. "You've guessed it!" said I, thinking it best to agree with him, although my name was Tom.

"Then come along?" and away we went. "Did Butler give you a pistol?" he asked. "No," said I, beginning to tremble. "He said he wanted them himself."

"Just like him. He told me I'd find you standing in Moor-gate between twelve and one, opposite the confectioner's, with your right hand in your pocket.

"I'm in for it!" thinks I, "but I must go through with it. But whatever will it come to at all at all."

He led me through a labyrinth of streets, walking rather fast, till we emerged upon the City Road. Then he made a straight for the Fleet-street, and from thence took a cab for Fleet-street.

What object he had in doing this I cannot say. He did not offer to explain; in fact, not a word, passed between us till we got out at the top of Ludgate Hill.

From thence we went into a back street, and out of that into another, no matter which, and suddenly stopping opposite a shop exclaimed— "There's our crib!"

"Is it?" says I. Whereupon he produced from his pocket a rule. The shop was evidently a tailor's, as it had bars standing out like the rungs of a Jacob's ladder, from each side of the door, to exhibit stock upon. My friend stepped on the first of these, which was three feet from the ground, and speedily measured the height of a large glass fanlight over the door; then, stepping down again, he measured the breadth of the door, and as the fanlight was square, he muttered to me by way of giving me its dimensions: "Three and a half by two high!" and chuckled quietly.

Then he crossed the road, and I followed, he explaining that we must wait till the policeman passed. He hove in sight about ten minutes afterwards, while we walked past him. Then we waited till he returned. This time we did not pass him, but watched from a corner at a distance.

"Twenty minutes and a half between going and coming," exclaimed my companion. "And a handy beat; for he comes up the corner there"—pointing to one a little beyond the shop—"and goes down this street next ours."

The impression began to steal over me that I was committing, or helping to commit, a felony, and that if caught I might get into trouble. I thought of running for it; but the remark my companion made at that moment, to the effect that it would be a short run if I deserted him (for he seemed to see I didn't like the job), deterred me. I dared not explain that he had made a mistake, for I felt sure that he must have mistaken me for some ally of his own. "I must go through with it," thinks I. "He'll leave me outside to watch, and I'll hook it then!" So I went on.

He crossed the street again the moment the policeman passed interfering with us, and producing a piece of stout black cloth, he applied the rule thereto, holding it against the shutters while he set out, "three and a half by two" thereon. This done, he cut it within two inches of the measurement all round; and then producing a treacle-pot from his pocket, he smoothed one side of the cloth with treacle, and desiring me to hold it, he mounted the shop-door, so to speak, again; and I gave him the cloth, which he immediately clapped on to the skylight, the treacle making it adhere firmly to the glass. Then, looking at his watch he cried:

"By Gosh! he'll be here this minute!" and away we walked. A glance behind us, as we turned the next corner. Not yet in sight! We stopped and waited, but the policeman came not. My friend muttered an oath, adding, "I'll go. Come along; but keep your weather-eye open!" And off we went.

"Perhaps he's watching us?" I suggested. But the idea was disregarded as not in the nature of a policeman "like that one we saw."

We arrived at the shop. He mounted again, and drove a string through a hole in the cloth. Then he ran a diamond round the edge of the glass. A gentle pat, and it gave way. Now I saw the use of the cloth and string. He could hold the glass by the string; and he slowly let it down into the shop, and, producing a long-shaped pad, he laid it along the bottom of the fanlight to cover the glass edge, and threw one leg into the opening and got astride of it!

"Follow me," he muttered, and ducked his head under the door-head. But before he could draw in the other leg, I mounted the ladder, and seizing it, gave him a pull that kept him from going in, at the same time yelling, "Police! Thieves! Murder! Police!" at the top of my voice. And, lo and behold! the policeman appeared at the corner at that moment. A horrible oath from within, a pistol-bullet whistling past my head, and I ran for death and life. I did not stop till I found myself in Broad Street.

In the next day's papers I saw the account of the capture of a burglar by one policeman, who had watched two burglars from the corner, and saw one enter the house, and the other leaped up the wall like a cat, grab at a disappearing leg, and yell "Police!" and run.

The one that was caught got seven years penal servitude, and "the police are searching vigilantly, though as yet unsuccessfully, for the other, who, it appears, is a desperate character!" they never caught him.

The Great French Remedy, Dr. LeDuc's Periodical Pills.

For the cure of Leucorrhoea or White's Excessive of painful Menstruation, Green Sickness, Falling of the womb, Catarrh of the Uterus or Vagina, Hysteria, Pain in the Back, or Piles, or for the purpose of increasing and giving tone to the Generative Organs, two pills should be taken twice daily, or in very enfeebled conditions, one pill three times a day. To effect cures in chronic cases it will be necessary to continue the use of the remedy for some months. A reasonable trial will create sufficient confidence in the remedy to insure its being taken until a permanent cure is effected.
