THE PRETTY SCHOOLMISTRESS.

In the thriving village of Hollythorn there is—as is common in such places—a church, post office, a couple of stores and a district school, the said school being taught by a young lady, who had a widowed mother and brother and sisters to assist in supporting. For the sake of economy, Miss Maude "boarded around" among the scholars, and was considered a paragon among teachers. Her father had been a respectable mechanic, but died after about two years of illness, which bitterly impoverished his family. Maude, however, being the oldest, received a good plain education before the great calamity came upon them, and unselfishly began her work of assisting in their support.

The last week previous to the holiday vacation she had been boarding with a Mrs. Carpenter, who was making gigantic preparations for guests she was expecting from New York.

"You never met my brothers, Maude," she said, and then began to give the pretty young teacher a description of them.

"There's Sam, George and John, the youngest, and such times as they have when they get here and rusticate, as they call it.
But, dear me, I don't get much rest or peace, for they are like a pack of boys let out of school. The last time they visited me altogether, John and Sam actually cut a pane of glass from the window and pelted George with snow out of my best room. You see there is always a regular strife for that particular room, for the bed is a spring one, and they don't sleep on any other in the city. But they don't get it this time that's certain, for I intend to keep you in that room, and so end the controversy. I am so afraid that they will break or ruin something that I am glad you are here. It may keep them in check a little."

"I had just as soon occupy some other room, Mrs. Carpenter, and do not wish to incommode your brothers—have no right to do so."

"No, you shan't, Maude," peremptorily exclaimed her hostess. "And what is the use of your going home vacation week? You can stay here just as well as not, and do your sewing on my machine. Your mother has got enough mouths to feed, I guess, and won't miss yours."

The subject was dropped and the entire household retired early, for on the morning the brothers, young, ardent and full of life, were to be there. But without sending any word of their intention, they had concluded to take the evening train, which would land them in Hollythorne about bed time.

John and George did so, and when safely seated in the cars began to speculate about the absence of Sam.

"No reason on earth why he should not be along," said George.

"No, for he told me this morning that he would certainly be on hand," said John.

"I can't make it out, unless he has taken the five o'clock train by mistake."

"Not a bit of it," laughed John, who fancied he understood the entire programme. "It is more than probable that he took the train on purpose to get Hannah's spare bed room, and make us take up with straw tick and feathers."

"I didn't think of that, but I reckon you are right. We must contrive to get him out, somehow."

"Bet your life on that!"

The brothers put their heads together, and laughed merrily over some scheme for outwitting Sam, and accordingly, when the train reached Hollythorne about eleven o'clock, they approached the house in a very stealthy manner.

Climbing the fence in the rear, they softly opened a window and gained access to the pantry, where they soon demolished a nice pie and a quantity of doughnuts.
Then with appetites appeased, they removed their boots and prepared to examine the best room. They stole along the hall, which was dimly lighted by the moon, ascended the stairs and reached the door.

The faint rays of the moon disclosed a chair filled with clothing, and they could distinctly trace the outlines of a form beneath the bed clothes, and had not the remotest idea but that Sam was enjoying sweet repose upon Hannah's best bed.

A few whispered words were exchanged and then, as softly and lightly as if shod with down they drew near.

"All ready," whispered John.

Quick as thought they seized upon the form of the sleeper, bed clothes and all, bore it swiftly down stairs out into the snow, and were just about to deposit it in a huge drift, when a shrill shriek broke the stillness of the night, and, Oh, great goodness!—it was the form of a woman! And in their dire confusion they dropped their delicate burden plump in the middle of a big drift.

"Good gracious!" exclaimed George, "it isn't Sam, but some woman, sure as I'm a sinner, and she's fainted. Run and call Hannah!"

"George! John! for goodness sake what does this mean? Who have you there?" asked Mrs. Carpenter in an excited manner.

"Blessed if I know," replied George, "thought it was Sam, so we concluded we'd give him a dose of snow for getting into the best bed and trying to enure us. Quick, I believe she's fainted!"

"Just like you," scolded Hannah, as she assisted in depositing Maude upon the bed from which she had been so unceremoniously taken; "you begin your tricks on each other before you get fairly into the house. Clear out!"

"Long before she was done with her tirade, her discomfited brothers had betaken themselves down stairs, where they almost went into hysterics over the joke."

"A pretty kettle of fish," said George, rolling over the floor, and letting off peal after peal of laughter.

"I should think it was," replied John, holding his sides. "Oh, my! but what the dickens is to be done about it, and who do you suppose it is, George?"

"Some guest of Hannah's, of course, and young and pretty at that. I don't know how it is with you, but I feel particularly small and extremely cheap—would sell myself at a very low price."

"Cheap!" roared John, "why I'd actually give myself away this blessed minute, and throw in something to boot.—What're you to do I can't say, but I believe I'll dig out of this place and get back to the city before morning. I haven't got courage to face the music, so I'll get up and go."

He began hastily putting on his boots, and would have put his throat into execution but for the appearance of Hannah, who at once asserted her authority.

"You are not going a single step, but I don't wonder that you feel ashamed of yourselves. What on earth possessed you is more than I can tell."

"That's right, Han, pitch in and scold away, I'll take any amount just now, for I'm as meek as a lamb. But who is it we have played so shabby a trick on?" asked George.

"Trick, I should say it was. Why, it was Maude Stanley—just as nice a think as ever lived. She is our school teacher, and this is her week to board here, and I knew you boys would be hagging and squabbling over that room as usual, so I put her there, little thinking you would come in such a stealthy way."

"Maude Stanley! Whew! A pretty school marm." And repeating his sister's words, he gave a lugubrious groan.

"Has she recovered?" inquired John, vainly endeavoring to restrain his laughter at the wry faces his brother was making.

"Yes, I soon brought her to, but I do not believe the poor girl will ever get over the fright. She said the first thing she knew she was being lifted up and carried out, and she couldn't utter a sound, but the moment the cold air struck her she realized that she was being abducted, or something of the kind, and had just time to utter a scream when she fainted. It is too bad.
I shouldn't wonder if she had taken her death cold by being dragged out of a warm bed this time of night and dropped into a snowdrift in that fashion. No wonder she cried, poor thing!"

"Cried, did she?" repeated George, with a groan.
