She doesn't compare herself now with the girl she was. She doesn't shrink from the tremendous process of giving life. She simply cooperates happily with nature and God, in which case, the man proclaims unconsciously, a matter some of awe and reverence and respect for his wife, which promotes a deeper, stronger bond of unity that the glamour or sex attraction that went before.

After marriage, it is a mistake to use the courtship gambit of running away. "Now you class me" when storms blow up. Marriage isn't dating. It is a vastly different kettle of fish. Marriage rewards those who give unwavering loyalty to the partnership and the partner, however faulty.

For advice: Get specialist help from a family service agency counsellor, in orienting yourself to the married state. Go back to your love, and start again.

MARY HAWORTH
 Sacred Newly Married Couple Quarrel And Part

Dear Mary Haworth: I am 20 and my husband is 23 and we have been married 14 months. I am seven months pregnant and working to help with the bills. We separated last week for the second time.

I went to my mother's and she called him first thing and told him to come and get me. He refused and said for her to tell him to come and get me. I won't let any woman dominate him.

When mother reminded him that he isn't free, that he is a married man with a baby coming, he said: "She's married, I'm not."

I am so upset I don't know what to do. The argument started one morning last week, at breakfast in front of his cousin, his teenage buddy who is very immature.

My husband said he was going to his job and he was to buy himself a pair of sandals. I was pretty unerved, as I wanted to send his company for reassurance as never before, which I am pregnant and my father declared, was not virtuously taking on Saturday, as we have taken a new apartment. No, to what? He is the one who wouldn't be stuck home all day. I dropped.

I dropped the subject, determined not to make a scene before his cousin, but took it up again that night, asking him to please stay home with me. He refused, denouncing me for making such demands. I lay in bed and he says he's over 21 and can do as he pleases.

I said I don't seem to love me or want the responsibility of the baby. He didn't make a move to defend me. I love him but can't live with such lack of consideration, especially now.

Should I go back to him, knowing his refusal to give up his "freedom"? Am I wrong and too domineering? I am so upset I don't know what to do.

Dear K.G.: Your husband is scared and so are you, each for a different reason. He is afraid of a man's responsibilities. He thinks he still has the job of a cat with his boss, and when his conscience says he shouldn't, he takes it out on you, putting you for his own feelings. This is the inner meaning of his refusal, selfish, defiant child-shoulder attitude.

You are afraid of losing him. Like two frightened snortles in the dark, you are fighting one another as enemies, in a sort of passive state. Each is trying to get the upper hand in self-defense, as if one had to break the other's heart, or pride, or spirit, or cut the person down to manageable size.

Just as your husband is mulling the job over as a first-rate family man, so too are you getting off the beam of being a wise, inspirational helpmate to him.

The truly wise wife (no matter how young) tends to make devoted allowances for the "little boy" qualities of her man, in the first year of marriage, she is adjusted to double barres.

ELEN'S DIARY
 Chimney Smoke Curls Lazily In Evening Breeze

In the yard, at the close of his chores, James stopped to take stock of the evening-odd take of the breath of wind that moved the new leaves, and got its direction from the smoke, that issued lazily from the chimneys. And found everything pleasing. "We heard at the time and saw it all in mind, a mixture of fog in the valley below, a precise chap, lift his hat, and at his signal the notes of a delightful aria commenced to drift up to us in the stillness prevailing. Solem and I were every liveliness season, the daily wonder, and surprise, of a warning new-cold earth in the wake of a white winter past."

"What's on your mind?" we queried.

"It's that bit of burning, El. James replied. "We must get rid of those heaps of brush, from that piece of lumbering we did up along the stream, when we reared the lane - bridge. We can't estimate that field until they're gone. And the machines will soon be moving in this way. This would seem to be a good evening to burn them - no wind to speak of."

"And born and left out of doors, it will be as wild as a deer!" James offered.

We remember of today the sun and the cloud-drift. And for the largest of this new year, which commences now to flow to our tables: the crisp freshness of water, cool from the spring, where it grows to be a tasteful garland and food; the strawberries that grow in the deserts, so good as it comes straight from the garden to the hands of the cook.

"And a dish of dandelion greens wouldn't go amiss either," Mrs. James said today. "That was always a part of the season. And the old folks always declared, was as virtuously good medicine, in a glass of the dandelion wine."

"What's the matter, hurriedly," Granddaughter, curled quietly in the old armchair, while the book she has been reading, "The best of friends must part," she smiles and says, "And the best of days end!"

"I'll be home tomorrow - - - Ditty - Goodnight. . ."

ALERT SOUNDED
 BURLINGTON, Ont. (CP) - An Ontario - wide alert was broadcast for a knife-wielding bandit who tried unsuccessfully to rob a Burlington service station operator Monday. It was the 16th time in 13 years that someone has tried to hold up Jack Costigan, proprietor of the service station. Mr. Costigan thwarted the attempt when he slugged the man with a soap bottle after being threatened.

City Ladies Attend Annual Needlework Guild Meeting
 Mrs. Gordon MacDonald and Mrs. Harry Cadmore, both of Charlottetown, and members of the Queen Mary Needlework Guild were in England recently and were among approximately 100 guests who attended the annual meeting of the guild held at St. James Place in London on Wednesday March 21st and presided over by Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth, the Queen Mother.

In speaking of their experiences at the meeting Mrs. MacDonald and Mrs. Cadmore said: "Upon entering St. James Palace we were ushered up a winding staircase to be met by Lady Elizabeth Bessant who conducted us to the state apartment where over 100 members of the guild had gathered. The walls of the apartment were covered with brilliant damask with matching drapes softened with white and muted woodwork. The decor was further enhanced with gold gilted mouldings and gilt chandeliers and mirrors.

"At this meeting we perceived a warmth of friendship and appreciation. The Queen Mother wore a dress of blue corded silk with red and white matching brocade hat, and attracting much attention was her pet ewe which she treated close to his mistress's side."
