Bridal Shower's Buffet Set To Hawaiian Theme

A GROUP of career girls decided to give a shower for one of their group to be married in June. They wanted an island motif for the affair and a Hawaiian menu that could be prepared from "convenience" foods.

All Contributed. They agreed to buy a chafing dish for the bride-to-be, to be used at the shower, then presented to her. Each girl contributed a dollar toward the purchase. A prettily packaged 15-cent fun-gift from each was chosen to look gay on the buffet table.

For a buffet supper, disposable plates, saucers and cups are important time-savers. The girls chose sturdy, attractive "Chinet" molded paper plates and platters for the service.

The girls shopped at a local super market after work, brought in the supplies and prepared the buffet for 12 persons to be served at 8 o'clock.

Revenue Dept. Reiterates Ruling On Church Donations

OTTAWA (CP)—The revenue department has reiterated that donations of time, labor or old clothes to churches do not qualify as income tax deductions.

It said the government cannot accept as valid deductions from income the amounts a taxpayer spends on bingo games, lotteries, card parties, or other entertainments even though they are held to raise funds for the benefit of a church or charity. The recurring problem came to a head most recently in the case of a Roman Catholic church in Timmins, Ont., which gave receipts for tax purposes to parishioners who helped rebuild the church altar after a fire, and for bingo games.

The receipts were disallowed and the Timmins member of Parliament, New Democrat Murdo Martin, then the question up with Revenue Minister Benson.

Mr. Martin said later he had been assured the receipts would be accepted. Mr. Benson said a revenue department investigator was assured no receipts for such donations of time and labor would be given in future.

PROMPTED INQUIRIES. However, news of the Timmins case has given rise to a flood of letters from church treasurers and parishers inquiring about the eligibility of various kinds of church donations for tax deduction purposes.

The department said it is determined to stick to its 1962 ruling that the following donations do not qualify for deductions for tax purposes:

1. Donations to charitable organizations outside Canada.
2. Donations to individuals.
3. Value of services rendered.
4. Value of merchandise where its costs have been charged as an expense of business.
5. Donations of old clothes, furniture and the like.
6. Amounts paid for card parties, bingo, lotteries, etc., despite the fact that such activities may be held for the benefit of charity and a portion may accrue to a charitable organization.

It is the responsibility of the help-seeker to use the sense God gave him to recognize the difference. If at first you don't succeed, then "try, try again," a proverb says. Certainly one can shop around (contrary to your defeatist theory), and indeed one should, in pursuit of therapeutic competence.

If, as a newcomer to the community, I were casting about for a first-rate psychological counsellor, I might begin with the telephone directory, or in for a local Medical Society listing, hopeful that said society maintains a referral service, furnishing names of reputable (non-advertising) practitioners on request.

I might also contact the local Family Service agency, or a Mental Hygiene Institute, or leading hospital out-patient clinic, or university hospital information staff, for possible references pointing to good therapists.

I might call at the rectory of the church of my choice, for a friendly knowledgeable "good neighbor" guidance in tracking down the professional help wanted.

In any case, I would assume that finding the answer to my need was my responsibility, primarily; that it was nobody's obligation to lead me by the hand. And I definitely wouldn't collaborate in being bored and/or treated as a sucker by a humbug who ignored the patient's rights while rambling on about his own preoccupations. M.H.

Dear Max Haworth: Does an excessive interest in pornography indicate an unwholesome bias in an otherwise healthy-appearing personality? One of my male co-workers hides these lurid paperbacks in a desk drawer and reads them furtively on his lunch hour.

This is strictly none of my business, but it detracts so much from my formerly high opinion of him I would value your comments (but please don't school me). T.S.

Dear T.S.: Excessive interest in pornography is indicative of a formative history of damaging deprivation on the score of wholesome love nurture, including essential educational support in achieving a fully human grasp of a normal repertory of human potentials. In short, the bias of which you speak is the shadow cast by a tragically malformed, dwarfed, bestialized misconception of the intrinsic nature and true significance of human sexuality, whereby mankind is co-creator with God, fashioning creatures made in God's image and likeness; that is, endowed with the faculty of infinitely expandable co-consciousness of God's powers. More Than Two Languages Are Advocated In Briefs

VANCOUVER (CP) - Recognition in Canada of more than two languages and cultures is advocated in most briefs being submitted here at the second day of hearings by the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism.

The Mennonite brief recommends that in addition to French, such languages as German, Ukrainian and Icelandic be taught as second language options from grade 1 to assist all language groups to survive.

A different tack is taken in a submission by the Trail, B.C. Chamber of Commerce. It says trail has become a better place to live in since Italian immigrants and their children learned to speak English.

The chamber says the 4,000-6,000 French-Canadians of Quebec would do well to learn English too.

The Trail group opposes any bilingual requirement for federal-civil servants. "This is nothing more than a harsh and unfair form of discrimination imposed without parliamentary vote and without reasonable warning."

Lambkins Were Heard From The Slope Below

"It was a cool night, Ellen. See?" James held a pail of water, which had been left out of doors, to view. "Ice" he nodded.

Yet it was a morning in which to be glad, bright and sunny for the farmers who would get on with the affairs of the cropping.

At Rob's there has been plowing and already cultivating has been done. At this farm, first stirrings patterned a field today. This afternoon became overcast and before long, Peter, in an upward look, laughingly counted the raindrops he caught on his young face.

We had been gardening, we two, enjoying the feel of the mellowing soil as we divided and moved to new locations, roots of this or that perennial in the flower border. We chatted together all the while, we answering as best we could the whys and hows of his questions. We noted too the incidentals - found again in another spring the familiar sounds of the time: the muted fall of the stream at the foot of the front meadow; the ebb and flow of traffic beyond the hills on the Highway; heard also the various bird-calls, and stopped to watch a pair of robins who were refurbishing their nest. Bleats of lambkins reached up from the slope below, and odd times we heard a low from the stables.

Would there come, to be an exciting reward for our interest and care a first blossom on the horse-shoe nut tree this year, a creamy candle of the June time? we wondered.

We planted trees with the children and their mother this evening; the neat pear trees Mack had fancied. And a Transperant (apple) to replace in the harvest, fruit from that in the old orchard which, a good friend of all our years at Alderlea and now bent and broken was about past bearing.

"Don't you think, Ellen?" James remarked at the outset, "we have plenty of trees around now?"

He stood a moment looking off to the hills that keep the secrets in regard to the future. "It will be years before these bear!" he said. "That is true" we agreed. But the thought lingered if folks planted a nily for their their own enjoyment, how few trees there would be about homes. No stately elms or oaks, no lindens to go on for generations, no maples or birches on lawn or yard.

Better make the opening a good size so as not to cumber the roots." James called presently across the yard to Mack. We smiled. He was as much interested in the planting as was the rest of the family. What do we plant when we plant a tree? It is an odd question, and is answered in many a way. On a farm, by this rite, we plant now, we think, to leave a love token from us to future generations of the name.

Well, here we go again, Ellen? James grins from the foot of the stairs. "It's bedtime. And morning's come early!" Until tomorrow - Diary - Good - night -
