Ask For Ayer's

Sarsaparilla, and be sure you get it, when you want the best blood-purifier.

With its forty years of unexampled success in the cure of Blood Diseases, you can make no mistake in preferring Ayer's to any other. The fore-runner of modern blood medicines, Ayer's Sarsaparilla is still the most popular, being in greater demand than all others combined.

Sarsaparilla

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla is selling faster than ever before. I never hesitate to recommend it."—George W. Whitman, Druggist, Albany, Ind.

"I am safe in saying that my sales of Ayer's Sarsaparilla far excel those of any other, and it gives thorough satisfaction."—L. H. Bush, Des Moines, Iowa.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla and Ayer's Pills are the best selling medicines in my store. I can recommend them conscientiously."—C. Bickhaus, Pharmacist, Roseland, Ill.

"We have sold Ayer's Sarsaparilla here for over thirty years and always recommend it when asked to name the best blood-purifier."—W. T. McLean, Druggist, Augusta, Ohio.

"I have sold your medicines for the last seventeen years, and always keep them in stock, as they are staples. 'There is nothing so good for the youthful blood' as Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—R. L. Parker, Fox Lake, Wis.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla gives the best satisfaction of any medicine I have in stock. I recommend it, or, as the Doctors say, 'I prescribe it over the counter.' It never fails to meet the cases for which I recommend it, even where the doctors' prescriptions have been of no avail."—C. F. Calhoun, Monmouth, Kansas.

Canadian Folk Song.

The doors are shut, the windows fast;
Outside the gust is driving past,
Outside the shivering ivy clings,
While on the hob the kettle sings,
Margery, Margery, make the tea,
Singeth the kettle merrily.

The streams are hushed up where they flowed,
The ponds are frozen along the road,
The cattle are housed in shed and byre,
While singeth the kettle on the fire,
Margery, Margery, make the tea,
Singeth the kettle merrily.

The fisherman on the bay in his boat
Shivers and buttons up his coat;
The traveller stops at the tavern door,
And the kettle answers the chimney's roar,
Margery, Margery, make the tea,
Singeth the kettle merrily.

The firelight dances upon the wall,
Footsteps are heard in the outer hall;
A kiss and a welcome that fill the room,
And the kettle sings in the glimmer and gloom,
Margery, Margery, make the tea,
Singeth the kettle merrily.

—William Wilfred Campbell.

In Memoriam.

On the 30th ult., at Ten Mile House, Lot 35, passed peacefully away after a short and painful illness of inflammation, William H. Webster, in the 54th year of his age, one of the most respectable farmers of that neighborhood. The deceased was a man of sterling character and unblemished reputation.

His upright walk through life, and strict honesty in all his dealings, commanded the confidence and esteem of all with whom he came in contact.

Although in feeble health most of his lifetime, and not being one of that number who are "born with silver spoons in their mouths," he rose, through energy and judgment in the prosecution of his business, to a position of opulence and independence in the community. His sudden and unexpected death has brought a deep gloom to the hearts of his sorrowing wife and bereaved family; for in the relations of husband and father, our departed brother had most worthily exemplified the duties of his station. Of a genial and hospitable disposition, he was a general favorite in the neighborhood; and many, both old and young, will cherish his memory in kindly remembrance in the years to come. His funeral was attended by Protestants and Catholics alike, all feeling that in his death the community had lost an upright and obliging neighbor whose place cannot easily be filled The services, conducted by the Rev. E. Slackford, were deeply affecting and solemn. Every respect was shown to the memory of the departed, who was held in such high esteem; and we may hope that, in the life upon which he has entered, having merited the approbation of his fellow-men while in the flesh, he has earned the Master's "Well done, good and faithful servant," and that freed from "all the ills to which humanity is heir," he has entered upon a higher service.

To his sorrowing wife and bereaved family we tender our sincerest sympathy.

Literary Notes.

The announcement that a new monthly magazine will shortly make its appearance, hailing from literary Boston, is calculated to excite a general interest. It will appear under the name of The Boston Monthly Magazine; and while it will, in a sense, compete with the standard periodicals of its class, it is designed to occupy a field entirely its own. It will be purely American in tone and sentiment, dealing chiefly with American subjects, by American authors. It will present each month the brightest and best stories, sketches, essays, poems, and articles that the "Young Blood" among the literary workers of the country can produce—a long experience in the publishing business having convinced the projectors of the magazine that many literary productions of remarkable merit fail to reach the public solely because of the youth and obscurity of their authors. A chief feature of the earlier numbers will be a short serial story, of romantic and thrilling interest, by a young writer whose name already ranks with the highest among American authors of fiction. The Boston Monthly Magazine will consist of about 168 pages each issue, with cover of handsome and tasteful design, and in typographical and general appearance, as in the quality, of its contents, is intended to be a worthy peer of the leading magazine of the day. The Boston Publishing Corporation, 48 Winter Street, Boston, are the publishers and the projectors of this new enterprise, which deserves the success it is no doubt destined to achieve.

The Guardian: "A little book entitled 'Ireland's wrongs and other poems,' has been laid upon our table by the author, Jacob B. Dockendorff. It bears the imprimatur of the EXAMINER office, and is neatly got up, and printed in fine clear type. From a hasty glance through its 79 pages, we have nothing but a friendly criticism to offer. The longest poem on 'The wrongs of Ireland' is in ballad form; a story of the olden times in P. E. Island, showing the evil of intemperance. Some of the pieces are exceedingly good, notably the one on 'The hand of God." Mr. Dockendorff is a young man of considerable poetic talent. We congratulate him on this his first effort, and are sure that his bright and healthy verses will be read by many with interest and benefit."

Personal.

A press correspondent writes:—"Premier Fielding, head of the government, certainly was designed by nature for a great managing editor. I felt as soon as I looked at him and heard him talk that journalism had sustained a loss when he entered public life. I am sure he has a latent humor which would evolve sparkling paragraphs, joined to an executive ability which would 'keep the boys to their work.' However, as it is easier to run an ordinary government than a big daily, he has probably chosen the better part." Yes,—and it is more profitable to run a Grit government!

The death of Judge Oliver at Ottawa, where he was attending ceremonies at Ottawa College, has drawn attention to a danger to which public men are frequently liable. The judge was exposed to the keen October air in his bare head in connection with the unveiling of a monument to the late superior of the college. It fell to his lot, as president of the graduates' society, to deliver an address on the occason, and this he did without the customary covering to his head, having removed his hat out of respect, as the practice is at these and similar ceremonies. Custom is pretty arbitrary in these matters, and few orators, delivering an address under these circumstances, would care to protect their health no matter how imminent the danger from catching cold might be. Adherence to the rule in this case has cost the country an able and respected member of the judiciary.

Prince Bismarck is in appearance now a feeble old gentleman, a London correspondent writes. Measured by that of some of his great contemporaries, he is not so very advanced in age. He will not be seventy-five until next April Fool's Day, which means that he is nearly fifteen years younger than Count Von Moltke, who is still hale and vigorous. Bismarck, too, is six years younger than Gladstone, seven younger than Cardinal Manning, five younger than Leo XIII., and ten years younger than Prince Gortchakoff was when he died. But he is not robust at all, and I believe that he frets a great deal over the fear that he may not last much longer. His face is waxen and flabby, and his hands are those of a very old man—yellow and swollen in the joints, and marked with unnaturally big blue veins. He is once more becoming very fat abdominally, and Dr. Schweninger is at his wits' end to keep this flesh down this time, for Bismarck is no longer able to walk much.

Cardinal Manning is as striking a preacher as he is a public speaker. Crowds always throng to the Catholic Cathedral at Kensington when he is to preach. I remember once hearing him deliver there, says a correspondent of the New York Commercial Advertiser, a discourse on democracy in Europe. I disagreed with nearly every word he said, but I could not help feeling the force of his argument from the point of view not only of Catholicism, but of ordinary Anglicanism and conservatism generally. The intimate connection of the European Revolutionary movement with materialism was dwelt upon with a force and vigor I have never heard surpassed. And the picture of the utter chaos of modern Europe, with its reign of brute force, its perpetual revolutions, its entire lack of any recognized moral authority, was enough to convert to reaction any man whose convictions were not based on pretty deep foundations.

News Notes.

The Italian Government has declared a protectorate over Abyssinia.

Thirty-five German authors were recently asked to prepare lists of the greatest English authors. The result was as follows, the figures representing the number of "votes" given to each author:—

	Votes.		Votes.
Shakespeare	21	Burns	9
Byron	14	Thackeray	5
Scott	14	Carlyle	5
Dickens	14	G. Eliot	3
Macaulay	11	Chaucer	2
Darwin	10	Bacon	1

The most conspicuous feature about this list is that it is just such a one as would be made by a popular assembly of English-speaking people, fairly well read, but not learned. The omission of Milton from a list which contains the names of Byron, Burns and Chaucer is rather remarkable. And it is strange to find the philosophical Germans giving only one vote to Bacon and eleven to Macaulay, and preferring Scott and Dickens to Thackeray, Carlyle and George Eliot.

The New York Herald's Washington correspondent recently interviewed several naval officers in regard to the dynamite gun. Commodore Sicard, Chief of the Bureau of Ordinance, expressed the general opinion when he said: "The gun is too large and cumbersome. It takes up too much room. It is admirably adapted for defending narrow passages and could be better utilized on shore than at sea. To send a projectile a distance of two miles the gun has to be elevated forty degress. This makes the curved firing necessarily inaccurate. With the high powered rifle the danger space is much larger on account of the line of fire being more accurate In a sea way, the air gun cannot be trained as well as the broadside and pivots now in use. The range of the dynamite gun is between one and a half and two miles. An ordinary ship could lie off and batter the dynamite cruiser to pieces before she could get within range. I believe the dynamite gun will eventually be a great success, but it has not yet been sufficiently developed to be used aboard men-of-war. It can never, in my opinion, take the place of the modern artillery."

Odds and Ends.

The man who marries a widow can at least boast that his wife does not come a miss.

"I am quite surprised, Mr. Meeker, at your wife's knowledge of parliamentary law." "She? Why, hasn't she been the speaker of the house for the last fifteen years?"
