ELLEN'S DIARY

Thanksgiving - A Day For Reflection And Gratitude

Again comes the Thanksgiving Day — a day set apart at harvest's close in which to count our blessings, to name them over, each precious pearl on the endless string of them, and acknowledge them humbly and reverently, from grateful hearts. So many there are.

For us who dwell on Island farms we are thankful we may say with the Psalmist, our lines have fallen in pleasant places. What a good life it is, one which with its sowings and reapings, its seedtime and harvest, its winds and its weathers, gives us in deed to work "hand in hand with God."

We are grateful, too, that ours is a Christian land where folks give homage to Him who rewards them neither according to their virtues nor yet their shortcomings... and where they strive to live in peace.

Our freedoms—how many we enjoy! We go to our day by day round without thought of landed "overseer or ruler," with "no one daring to make us afraid."

Our worship is, too, no stollen forgering of service, but to the Church and fellowship of our choice, a place where hearts may find that loving forgiveness they crave, worries are lightened or lost, and spirits always refreshed.

For the beauty so lavishly spread about for our benefit and appreciation we remember to give thanks: the clean blue of these October mornings, the sun-mellowed day, the eventide shades, the dim of night soft as doves' wings, sheltering us as we and the day go in peace and content to rest.

For home, hallowed as homes are, for family—the blessed unbroken circle with parents and little ones about; for kin who despite our vanities and our faults love us still; for neighbors and friends who share with us our moments of success, and seasons of sorrow... for the expectancy and promise of high adventure and happiness of each new day that dawns—we are grateful.

Beloved family— Home and our sod." Until Tuesday — Diary — Good night.
