BENSDORP'S ROYAL DUTCH COCOA.

—o—

BENSDORP'S Royal Dutch Cocoa has a most enviable repute the world over. It is manufactured at Bensdorp & Co.'s extensive works in Amsterdam, Holland. The excellence of the beverage is not to be wondered at, considering the care exercised its production. The beans from which it is manufactured are the product of one of the famous South American plantations, exclusively. The crop is shipped to the factory, where it is carefully picked, roasted and ground; the grease is then extracted by hydraulic pressure resulting in a powder entirely free from oil and moisture, which completes the manufacture The product is then put up in parchment papers and in turn enclosed in hermetically sealed tins, which preserve it from deterioration in any climate. It is so highly appreciated at court that it is manufactured under Royal Letters Patent of the King of the Netherlands, by whose special command it is known as the "Royal Dutch Cocoa." The Royal family of Great Britain are constant consumers and prefer it to any other.

Bensdorp's Royal Dutch Cocoa is for sale in Charlottetown by Geo. Carter & Co.

MRS. ROSS—Dear Madam,

HAVING used your "Magic Healer" Salve for scratches and cuts on Horses, I have no hesitation in saying that it is the best article I have ever tried for the purpose, and would recommend farmers and dealers in horses, to give it a fair trial.

The Bad Brother.

They were sitting by the fireside
On a very frosty night,
And their heads were close together
As they talked of—well—the weather,
Or, perhaps—the "Injun" fight.

As their chat grew more engrossing
Near and nearer yet he drew,
Till her fair hair brushed his shoulder,
And in trembling tones he told her
Of the—sorrows of the Sioux.

Then he put his arms about her
In the dimly-lighted room,
And they saw naught but each other,
Never heard her bad, small brother
Stealing softly through the gloom.

Till a flash dispelled the darkness
And a shrill voice cried with glee:
"Caught your photo—you and sister—
Pa will like to know you kissed her—
Buy the negative from me?"

The Treatment of Dandruff.

Dr. Edward Clarke, in the Lancet, states that he has had good results in persistent dandruff from the following treatment: The scalp should first be thoroughly washed with soap and hot water and then thoroughly dried with a warm and soft cloth; there should then be rubbed into the scalp a glycerole of tannin, of the strength of ten to thirty grains to the ounce. Very obstinate cases will require the higher strength of tannin. This process should be repeated twice a week at first, once a week afterward. If tannin fails, as it will in some cases, then resort is had to resorcin. After the formation of dandruff has ceased, the head should be rubbed daily with olive oil containing, to the ounce, ten grains of carbolic acid and a drachm of oil of cinnamon.

"Please Stop My Paper."

Now a newspaper, in one aspect, is something like a hotel table. It presents to its readers literary viands and views from many different writers on many different subjects, to suit many different persons of many different tastes. There is something for the old and the young; for ministers and laymen, for parents and children; for the poetic and the prosaic, for the practical and devotional; and in short, for "all sorts and conditions of men"—and women, too. If now, one of these classes of persons objected to articles suited for any of the other classes, and rejects a newspaper on that account, he is just as unreasonable in this, as if he refused to take his dinner at a hotel table because he dislikes some articles of food which others enjoy.—Lutheran Observer.

Give Him a Cheer.

"Give him a cheer." The hearty words came from the lips of some one in the crowd gathered around a building enveloped in flames, and were prompted by the momentary faltering of a brave fireman at the final effort that was needed to save a human life. Instantly hats were waving in the air, and above the crackling and roaring of the fire the cheering of the multitude below fell upon the ears of the wavering fireman. Electrified by the applause, he renewed his efforts, beat back the flames that scorched his face, burst in the window that would not yield to the young girl's strength, and through a cloud of smoke and fire bore his unconscious burden to her weeping friends below. The application of this incident to those who bear the brunt of enforcing temperance law can be readily made. Give the temperance worker a cheer.

Barnum as a Patient.

During Mr. Barnum's sickness many tracts and religious papers are sent to him, and also he is frequently solicited by Christian friends to engage in prayer. To these solicitations he invariably replies rather petulantly: "What for? Shall we come like a set of poor miserable mendicants, begging God to do what we want, whether He wants it or not? For my part, I believe in a God who is my infinitely loving Father, and I cannot, I dare not ask Him to do my will, save as it corresponds with His. All I can pray, all I dare pray, be it the last hour of the day, or of life, is Thy will be done."

Mr. Barnum's physicians attribute his remarkable power to endure suffering and to recover from disease to the fact that his system is entirely free from alcoholic and tobacco poison, he having used neither for a great many years. As for his business affairs, Mr. Barnum has always kept them up snugly, having for his business agents men of excellent ability and unswerving integrity, who keep everything well regulated, which is great consolation to him on what may after all be his death bed. But like every faithful steward, Mr. Barnum proposes to attend to his work while his day lasts.—Boston Christian Leader.

It Didn't Work.

A woman was in charge of a saloon on Russell street the other day when a man entered, looked around for the husband, and finding the coast clear he tenderly observed:

"Madam, I have been apointed a committee to wait upon your husband."

"Yes."

"To see if he would accept a nomination."

"Yes."

"We have decided to run him for alderman of this ward."

"Yes."

"And, I believe, it is usual on occasions of this sort to greet the committee—receive them with liburality—in fact, set up the beer."

"Yes," she replied, as she went on with her knitting, "but you'd better see my husband."

"Oh, certainly, where can he be found?"

"About six miles out on the Centre Line road."

"Coming in soon?"

"Hardly, he's out there in a burying ground. He's been out there seven years."

"Ah! I see. And in that case he probably won't accept?"

"Probably not."

"And the best thing for the committee to do is to retire as gracefully as possible and as dry as a bone. The committee retires."—Detroit Free Press.

A London Newspaper.

The Pall Mall Budget, which is edited by Charles Morley, a friend of Tenfel, the Tornier's has been considerably enlarged, and is now printed on paper of a startling whiteness and smoothness. The blocks come out much better, but the typography is not good. The Budget was started many years ago, but it is only since it has been under the editorial control of Charles Morley that it can be said to have become really successful. Charles Morley is a nephew of John Morley, the man of letters and politician. The nephew is an excellent journalist—a good deal more than can be said of the uncle—has a very keen eye for "copy," and just a dash of that sensationalism so much desired in the present day. John Morley's regime at the Pall Mall Gazette office is well remembered by his colleagues, who found him a stern but by no means hard taskmaster. He was not a successful editor, and as was pointed out at the time, the paper while in his hands was practically written for the Cobden Club, John Morley was a literary man thrust into an editor's chair. He could not write a line if there were the slightest noise in the rooms near him, corrected his proofs most scrupulously, and took an interest in few subjects except Ireland. In those days he used to leave the Pall Mall Gazette at luncheon time and cross over to Athenæum Club, where he always took a short nap. This, so far at least as journalism is concerned, brought his day to a close.—Newark Evening News.

What She Did.

An example of courage is preserved by the descendants of Christiana Dickson, the wife of one of the first settlers of Erie County, Pennsylvania. She was a small, blue-eyed, low-voiced woman, extremely timid by nature; on only one point was she resolute; she had a horror of drunkenness.

She lived in the days when the use of liquor was universal. Whiskey was as common a drink as water, among these hardy, hard-working pioneers. A temperance or abstinence society was unheard of.

But when her sons were born, she resolved, as far as she could, to put a stop to whiskey-drinking in her home. Her husband being absent from home, her brothers called for the help of the neighbors, according to the custom of the time, to put up a barn needed on her farm. They all assembled and went to work, while she prepared a great dinner. After an hour or two, whiskey was asked for. One of her brothers came the house for it; she refused to provide it, to make her friends drunk.

Her other brothers, and at last an elder in the church, came to reason with her; to tell her that she would be accused of meanness. Without a word, the little woman went out to the barn, and baring her head, stepped upon a log and spoke to them in a faltering voice:

"My neighbors," said she, "this is a strange thing. Three of you are my brothers, three of you are elders in the church, all of you are my friends. I have prepared for you the best dinner in my power. If you refuse to raise the barn without liquor, so be it. But before I will provide whiskey to give you, these timbers shall rot where they lie."

The men angrily left the work and went home: the little woman returned to the house, and for hours cried as though her heart would break. But the next day every man came back, went heartily to work, enjoyed her good dinner, and said not a word about whiskey.

He Admired Frankness.

A man stood thoughtfully leaning against a lamp post. A stranger approached him, and after a moment's scrutiny said:—

"Excuse me for this intrusion upon your apparent meditation, but I wish to ask you a few question."

"Certainly," said the man, bowing and regarding the fellow with a kindly eye.

"I thank you for your consideration," rejoined the fellow, bowing with equal courtesy if not with equal grace. "I wish to ask you if you do not admire that quality which we term frankness."

"Yes, of course I do."

"I am delighted to hear you say so, sir. Now," he added, after a short pause, "you may think me very peculiar, and doubtless I am, but something impels me to be frank with you."

"All right, sir, go ahead."

"Thank you, I'll do so. Now, just a few moments ago, as I stood over there regarding you, it struck me that I did not like your looks, and debated within myself the question whether or not I should tell you. The delicate consideration, the bright hue of reason that some times lights up the dark ground of impulse, suggested that I should first discover whether or not you were an admirer of frankness. I am glad that you are, for it gives me the opportunity of telling you without malice that I do not like your appearance. See?"

"That's all right," the man quietly replied. "You have a right to express your opinion."

"You are a considerate man," said the fellow. "Now, still believing that you are an admirer of frankness, I should like to tell you that I would not trust you ten minutes."

"That's all right," the man rejoined.

"And furthermore," the fellow continued, "I feel that you are a pickpocket."

"A man has a right to express his feelings. You acknowledge that, don't you?"

"Assuredly, sir. I have expressed my feelings, and why should not you express yours?"

"I should express mine, and shall do so; but before I give you an expression of those feelings you must promise to treat me with as much consideration as I have treated you."

"Oh, I promise that."

"All right, here goes," and picking up his foot with an electric jerk, he kicked the fellow into the street. "That's my opinion of you."

The fellow rubbed himself for a moment, and then through a horrified grin said:

"Look here, I do like frankness, but I don't care to see a man so blamed outspoken."—Arkansaw Traveller.
