Simpson - Toombs Wedding

On the beautiful autumn day of October 18th, 1950 Cavendish United Church was artistically decorated with cut flowers and potted plants when the pastor Rev. George Gough assisted by Rev. Paul Richardson pastor of Cavendish Baptist Church united in marriage Cora Mae, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Toombs of Mayfield to Reginald Baglole son of Mr. and Mrs. Jeremiah Simpson of Cavendish.

To the strains of Lohengrin Wedding March played by Mrs. John Haslam of Carleton, the charming bride entered the Church on the arm of her father. She was attired in a floor length gown of white satin, slightly entrained, with net yoke, and lace and pearl trimmings. Her fingertip veil of tulle fell from a head-dress of satin and lace. She carried a bouquet of pink and white carnations.

The bridesmaid, Miss Ena MacLeod of Charlottetown wore a gown of American Beauty taffeta and carried a bouquet of yellow Mums.

Little Ruth Johnston the winsome flower girl, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David Johnston and cousin of the bride completed the charming picture as she preceded the bride up the aisle sprinkling pansies and white alyssium from her basket, which was decorated with pink and blue streamers. She was gowned in pale blue taffeta.

The groom was supported by John Toombs brother of the bride William Johnston and Merrill Simpson, friends of the groom ushered. The groom's gift to the bride was a gold compact. Appropriate gifts were given to the attendants.

As the bridal party formed at the front of the Church the Lords Prayer was sung by Miss Mary Muttart of Carleton. Following this the beautiful double ring ceremony was performed. During the signing of the Register Miss Muttart sang "O Perfect Love".

The bride's mother chose a dress of steel blue with black accessories and wore a corsage of red roses. The groom's mother chose a dress of Wine crepe with black accessories and wore a corsage of pink carnations.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at "Lakeview Lodge." The dining room was beautifully decorated with autumn flowers and ferns and the bride's table was centered with a three-tier wedding cake.

Amid showers of confetti and best wishes the bride and groom left on a motor trip through the Maritimes. For travelling the bride wore a two-tone grey wool dress and grey velvet hat, with navy coat and shoes, grey gloves, and carried a navy hand toled leather bag.

Prior to her marriage, the bride was employed in the Accounting Department of the Canadian National Railways at Moncton New Brunswick, and was guest of honor at several social functions, receiving several beautiful gifts from the office staff, and members of the Central United Church Choir and Womens Association of which she was a member.

Also on the evening of October 5th, Mrs. Blair Andrew opened her spacious Lounge at "Shining Waters" Cavendish to a large number of friends who gathered to bestow best wishes and many lovely gifts to the bride to be. A beautiful log fire lent a warm cheery glow to the room, which was prettily decorated for the occasion, and a delicious lunch was served to all present.

On their return from their honeymoon they were greeted by some thirty guests and sat down to a bountiful supper served by the mother of the groom, assisted by Mrs. Robert Woolmer and Mrs. Newton McInnis, after which the serenaders arrived and extended best wishes, and a lusty sing-song was enjoyed. They will reside in Cavendish, Prince Edward Island where the groom is a prosperous farmer.

On Thursday evening November 2nd, Mr. and Mrs. Simpson were at home to their friends. Some forty-five friends and neighbors called. After the guests viewed the many beautiful gifts a buffet luncheon was served. Mrs. Kenneth Doull and Mrs. Sterling Stewart poured. Those who assisted in serving: Miss Blanche Wynd, Miss Mary Stewart, Mrs. Eric Simpson, and Mrs. Gordon Carew.

Slow Boat From Marseilles

"He seemed to grope his way," said Vanya.

"His sight is failing," Oliver explained. "Perhaps the shock has done the rest. I must go. Wait here. I'll be back as soon as I can."

She shook her head. "I'm coming with you," she declared.

For a moment he hesitated, then he gave in to her wishes. "Keep well behind me," he warned. "If there is any shooting come straight down again."

And so they reach the deck—just in time to see the last phase. Rutter was blundering across the poop deck and the small, dark figure of Jan was closing in upon him. Once or twice Rutter paused, his arms groping into space. Then, it seemed, he heard Jan, for he would make a short rush away. At times he blundered into obstacles and came near to falling.

Gradually, he came nearer to the side. Jan closed in relentlessly. They could hear his voice, shrill with almost hysterical accusations.

"You killed Stefan! Murderer!"

Rutter gave a cry, more animal than human. He rushed forward evidently with the intention of trying to close with his enemy. But Jan was not there, and his charge took him straight to the low rails. For a second, his body seemed to remain there, held by some mysterious force. His arms waved wildly as he groped for support. Then, with a drawn-out scream, he went over. There was only one figure left on the deck. Jan stood perfectly still almost stupefied.

Then he ran to the rails and looked over. The lights from the ship showed the dark water. A white trail from the wake spread out into the surrounding darkness.

Connor came running to Oliver's side.

"Shall we lower a boat, sir?" he asked.

Oliver hesitated. Then he shook his head.

"It's perhaps better this way," he said quietly.

CAPTAIN OLIVER

Captain Zakas shuffled uncomfortably. He had not fully recovered from the shocks of the previous night, when he had lain trussed in his bunks, wondering what was taking place, a prey to a thousand fears. He received little comfort now from Oliver, whose face was sternly set.

But Zakas plucked up sufficient courage to ask: "What are you going to do with me?" He waited for an answer.

Oliver was in a mood for brutal frankness. "You deserve to be thrown over the side," he said bluntly. "It would be doing a service to the world. You're an unscrupulous scoundrel and you'd betray your own mother for a few pounds."

Zakas bowed his head.

"I broke the law once," he said. "I did it because it was profitable. I know. Also, it seemed more adventurous than taking cargo from one port to another. I never intended it to be more than an escapade. Only I found that I was in the power of others. From that moment I was not a free man. I have never been free since then. It was never quite as bad, of course, as when Prinz became my master."

"And now that you've been run to earth you're worried about the punishment," said Oliver curtly. "Well, you have a chance of making good." He laughed bitterly. "No, I'm not expecting any change of heart. Once you extricate yourself from this you'll promptly plunge into some new devilry."

Zakas shook his head.

"I can understand your distrust," he said slowly. "But you overlook something. This—experience, I suppose is the best word for it—has worn me out. I need rest. I want to settle quietly somewhere and be left alone."

"I don't suppose that repentance will last for long," Oliver told him unkindly. "You'll soon be back again—smuggling, or running guns. Maybe carrying refugees who have been bled white for passage money. I know your kind, Zakas." He shrugged his shoulders. "However that is hardly my concern. We are going to continue the voyage."

"Not to..."

"I know the ultimate destination. For the moment you will take your turn of duty and keep the ship on the course that I shall select. What happens ultimately depends upon how well you behave. I warn you, Zakas, that I shall show no mercy if you get up to any trickery. The first hint of anything like that and you will follow Prinz and Rutter—over the side."

Zakas went pale.

"But that would be murder!" he cried.

Oliver shook his head. "Not in your case. It would merely be exterminating a rodent."

"I'll not get up to tricks," Zakas promised.

"Mind you don't forget that. In case you should toy with such an idea, you'd better bear in mind that Lacoste seems to think that you double-crossed him. That is none of my affair; but I don't think you'll obtain his help."

"You won't let him harm me?" Zakas pleaded.

"That's your affair," Oliver said.

Dorothe Dix Says Continued from page 2 ing to see that you have a good time, that is love. But if a boy always does his own way; if he runs roughshod over you; if he is always hurting your feelings; if he breaks dates; if he is careless of your happiness, then he doesn't really love you, no matter how much he says he does. And this test of love goes for girls as well as boys. DEAR DOROTHY DIX: My husband is a good man in every sense of the word. He is tender, kind, generous, everything that any wife could want in a husband, and we have three lovely children to whom I am devoted. But I am in love with another man and he with me and he, too, has a good wife and children to whom he is devoted. There is no question of divorce because too many people would be hurt, but is it our duty to be honest and confess our unfaithfulness to our mates? ANSWER: No. A thousand times no. You would only make a bad matter worse. Certainly you have done these other harm enough without adding to it by destroying their faith in you and filling their hearts with torturing jealousy. If a wrong can be righted by confessing it, there is some justification in doing so, but when what has been done has been done and nothing can change it, then the guilty could keep their secrets to the end. It is a part of their punishment. DOROTHY DIX cannot reply personally to readers, but will answer problems of general interest through her column. THE END
