

A HEAVY BURDEN.

(CONCLUDED.)

'Aye, you have the burden in your heart, and you mean to carry it home. Of course such burdens can be thrown off. Now you have resolved you will go to dinner with a heavy heart and a dark face. You have no hope that your wife will meet you with a smile. And why? Because you know she has no particular cause for smiling. You know that her heart is burdened with the affliction which gives you so much unrest. And you are fully assured that you are to find your home shrouded in gloom. And furthermore you don't know when that gloom will depart and when the blessed sunshine of love will shine again. And why don't you know? Because it is not now in your heart to sweep the cold away. You say to your self, 'I can bear it as long as you can! Am I not right?'

Clarence did not answer in words. 'I know I am right,' pursued the merchant; 'and very likely your wife is saying to herself the same thing. So Clarence, you see it does not rest upon the willingness to forgive, but on the inability to bear the burden. By-and-bye it will happen, as it has happened before, that one of the twain will surrender from exhaustion; and it will be likely to be the weaker party. Then there will be a collapse, and a reconciliation. Generally the wife falls before the galling burden, because her love is keener and most sensitive. The husband in such a case acts the part of a coward. When he might with a breath blow the cloud away, he cringes and cowers until the wife is forced to let the sunlight through her breaking heart.'

Clarence listened, and was troubled. He saw the truth, felt its weight. He was not a fool, nor was he a liar. During the silence that followed he reflected on the past, and he called to his mind many scenes just as Mr. Wardle had depicted, and this brought to him the remembrance of how he had seen his wife weep when she had fallen and sank beneath the heavy burden, how often she had sobbed upon his bosom in grief for her error.

The merchant read the young man's thoughts, and after a time he arose and touched him upon the arm.

'Clarence, suppose you were to put on your hat and go home now. Suppose you should think on the way, only of the love and blessing that might be; with this thought, you should enter your abode with a smile on your face, and you should put your arms around your wife's neck and kiss her, and as softly say to her, 'My darling, I have come home to throw down the burden I took away with me this morning. It is greater than I can bear.' Suppose you were to do this, would your wife repulse you?'

'Repulse me?'

'Ah, my boy, you echo my words with an amazement that shows you understand me. Now, sir, have you the courage to try the experiment?'

Sarah Spencer had finished her work in the kitchen and the bed-chamber, and sat down with her work in her lap. But she could only ply her needle. Her heart was heavy and sad, and tears were in her eyes.

Presently she heard the front door open, and a step in the passage. Certainly she knew that step! Yes, her husband entered, and a smile upon his face. She saw it through her gathering tears, and her heavy heart leaped up. He came and put his arms around her neck, and kissed her; and then he said to her in broken accents:

'Darling, I have come home to throw down the burden I took away with me this morning. It is greater than I can bear.'

And she, trying to speak, pillowed her head upon his bosom and wept like a little child. She saw him noble and generous and she worshipped him.

But Clarence would not allow her to take all the blame. He must share that. 'We will share it so evenly,' said he, 'that its weight shall be felt no more. And now, my darling, we will be happy.'

'Always.'

It was a year after this—and Clarence Spencer had become partner in the house—that Mr. Wardle, by accident, referred to the events of the gloomy morning.

'Ah,' said Clarence with a swelling bosom, 'that was the most blessed lesson I ever received. My wife knows who gave it to me.'

'And it serves you yet, my boy?'

'Aye, and it will serve us while we live. We have none of those old burdens of anger to bear now. They cannot find lodgment with us. Sometimes we are foolish; but we laugh at our folly when we see it, and throw it off; we do not nurse it until it becomes a burden.'

MUSIC AND SINGING.

ON and after AUGUST 1st, MRS. JAMES BROWN will give instruction in Music and Singing at her residence, King Square. Terms on application.

A Good Account.
'To sum it up, six long years of bed-ridden sickness and suffering, costing $200 per year, total $1,200—all which was stopped by three bottles of Hop Bitters taken by my wife, who has done her own household work for a year since, without the loss of a day, and I want everybody to know it for their benefit.'

Report on the LORNE HIGHLAND WHISKY:
'We have visited the bottling stores of Greenlees Brothers, and have selected from the vats, samples of their Lorne Highland Whisky, and have subjected them to careful examination and analysis. The samples were very fragrant, mellow, and of pleasant flavor, and possessed all the characteristics of pure and well-matured Scotch Whisky of the first quality.'
