Opening lead — nine of diamonds.

One important ingredient of good defensive play is the willingness to make any reasonable assumption that might lead to defeating the contract.

For example, suppose you have the East cards and are defending against four hearts. West leads a diamond, which you win with the king, and whether you realize it or not, the outcome of the hand depends upon what you play at trick two.

If you return a diamond or a low spade, South makes the contract with ease. He forces out the ace of hearts, draws trumps, and eventually winds up with exactly ten tricks. But if you lead the king of spades at trick two and continue with a spade, South goes down regardless of how he chooses to play. If he ruffs the spade continuation, his trump length becomes equal to yours, and whenever he tackles trumps, you take the ace, return a spade, and then have one trump more than he, after he ruffs.

You can't achieve the same effect if you return a low spade at trick two. West takes the ace and returns a spade, but when declarer ruffs your king, dummy's queen becomes a trick. Now you can no longer force him to ruff a spade after you take the ace of hearts.

The king of spades at trick two is certainly an unusual play, but that is surely not a good reason for failing to make it. The fact is that you cannot possibly defeat the contract unless your partner has the ace of spades, and you must therefore assume that he does.

Once you place the ace of spades in partner's hand, it follows that the proper spade to lead is the king, not a low one. The king will be effective whether South has one, two, or no spades, while a low spade back instead of the king may easily prove disastrous.

The king can do no wrong!

Canada May Gain Some Time In Abandoning French Bases

LONDON (CP)—Gen. Jean Allard, chief of the Canadian defence staff, hinted Thursday gain time in the arduous job of removing its two air bases from France.

"We have some good arrangements with the French," Allard said in a telephone interview from Paris when asked whether the April deadline will have to be rigidly observed.

However, once the move is made, there will be no remnant of Canadian military air transport on French soil.

Allard, who previously suggested it would be advantageous for Canada to have such transport in France to serve Canadian military commitments in the Middle East and elsewhere, said "it is not necessary nor desirable to leave anything behind."

"We can supply the Middle East no matter where we relocate," President de Gaulle has ordered all NATO military bases closed by April. Allard has said this involves problems for Canada.

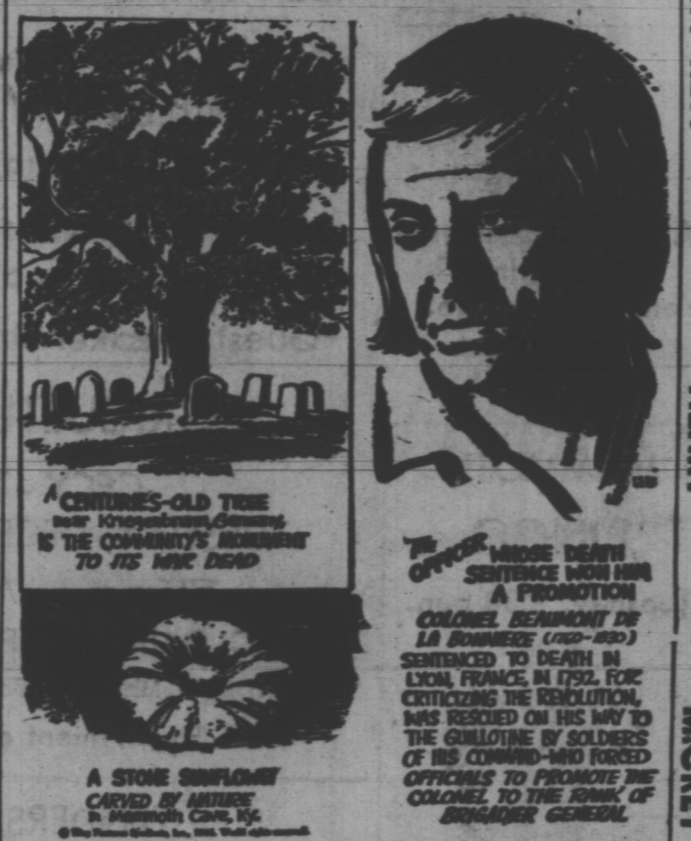

Shutting the air wing at Marville and the headquarters base at Metz was "easier said than done." Not only did this pose a logistics problem but relocation would require new barracks, married quarters and schools which "cannot be provided in one day."

Asked specifically whether France now had agreed to extend the deadline for removal of the bases, Allard said he could say no more than that "we have some good arrangements with the French."

As for the new location, this must await the final approval of NATO Commander Gen. Lyman Lemnitzer, with whom he will confer Monday.

The Canadian government already has indicated the Canadian air division is to be reduced to six squadrons from eight and retained in West Germany.

Air Canada's Loss Estimated

MONTREAL (CP)—Air Canada lost $9,500,000 in gross revenues during the recent two-week strike by its 8,200 machinists, a spokesman for the airline said here.

The net loss, allowing for savings on wages and operating costs during the walkout, was about $3,500,000. This was in line with Air Canada's estimate during the strike that it was losing $900,000 a day.

The strikers, members of the International Association of Machinists, walked out Nov. 14 and returned Nov. 27 after approving the terms of a new contract. The strike was the first in the 28-year history of the airline and grounded its entire fleet of 86 aircraft.
