Confederation Seen "Curse" For Nova Scotia

HALIFAX, March 26 — (CP) — Premier Macdonald said Friday Nova Scotia has suffered for 83 years under the "curse" and the "burden" placed on it by Confederation.

The "evil and sinister effect" of the bargain made by Nova Scotia at the time of Confederation has been felt ever since, he told the Legislature during the Throne Speech debate.

"There never was a poorer bargain struck by any province and it has had its effects to this day," the 50-year-old Liberal premier said.

Premier Macdonald has held office in the province since 1933 with the exception of five wartime years as federal navy minister.

He said Sir Charles Tupper and other Nova Scotia delegates to the pre-Confederation conferences were so anxious to be considered "great Canadians and builders of nations" that they forgot their first loyalty — to the province from which they came.

He directed his attack at the financial arrangements in the terms of Confederation — particularly the overriding right of the federal government to taxation fields, such as income and corporation taxes, assigned to the province.

The remarks were prompted by a speech earlier this week by Progressive Conservative leader Robert Stanfield. Mr. Stanfield said the Nova Scotia delegates to Confederation conferences — predominantly Conservatives — were men of great vision.

Premier Macdonald said: "From the point of view of economics, Confederation was a bad thing for Nova Scotia." It could be defended, perhaps, on the grounds it rounded out a nation and on grounds of defence.

"We are in it now and we must make the best of it," he said. But the province still felt the effects of "unwise" financial arrangements and 83 years afterwards many of the terms still were "onerous and galling to us in Nova Scotia."

Bilateral Trade

MONTREAL, March 24 — The dictum of bilateral trade that, "if you want to keep on selling to us, you must buy more from us," has become a matter of "very practical moment" to Canadians, comments the Bank of Montreal in its latest Business Review, issued today.

"Hardly a day passes that some aspect of this situation is not brought home to Canadian exporters and importers alike."

In this respect, the B of M finds "challenging significance" in the recently published official estimate of Canada's international transactions in 1949. "These transactions include not only merchandise exports and imports, but also 'invisible' items, such as travel receipts, dividends, shipping and other charges."

"The reassuring aspect of the picture is that, over all, Canada did not live beyond her means on international account in 1949," the review states. However, the credit balance of $13 millions, representing the margin of exports of goods and services over merchandise imports and other current expenditures, was sharply reduced from the previous year's figure.

Currency Area Dilemma

"Of more immediate importance than the over-all results of international transactions, however, was the hard fact that the problem of Canada's contrary balances with the two main currency areas was accentuated in the past year. Thus our adverse current account balance with the United States ran up by 50 per cent from $401 million in 1948 to $604 millions in 1949."

In areas of trade, Canada's "favourable" balance with the United Kingdom contracted slightly between 1948 and 1949, the B of M notes. "But the gap between the United Kingdom's earnings and requirements of Canadian dollars was still discouragingly large," the review continues. "Further, it will be noted that the imbalance with the rest of the sterling area was actually widened by a combination of higher Canadian exports and lower imports."

"By contrast, western European countries, receiving ERP funds both bought less from Canada and sold more here, thus significantly reducing their deficit on current account with this country."

Vocation Week At Notre Dame

The annual Vocation Week at Notre Dame Academy, which closed Friday, brought the students a wealth of information concerning various professions which they may follow in later life, and splendid guidance in deciding what they may do after graduation.

The conferences were held in the Sodality Hall, which was appropriately decorated with posters and bulletins pertaining to the various careers.

Reverend Mother Superior opened the series of discussions with an enlightening talk on vocations in general. She stressed the necessity of thought, prayer and serious preparation in order to choose the walk of life for which each is best suited.

On Thursday, Reverend Sister Stanislaus, C.S.M., Superintendent of Nurses at the Charlottetown Hospital, gave an interesting and instructive talk on the Nursing Profession. This together with the attractions offered by the new Pavilion of the City Hospital must have given the nursing profession a new appeal to the students.
