Paraglider works well

HOUSTON, Tex. (AP) — A landing device for bringing U.S. spacecrafts back to dry ground instead of water was tested successfully Thursday at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif. US space agency officials announced.

The device is called a paraglider and it was the third time it had been flown by a test pilot. In the two previous flights, the pilots were injured.

The landing device is not expected to be ready for the Gemini program. Officials hope it can be developed in time for the Apollo program, which has an objective of landing two men on the moon by 1969.
