Italian Note

ROME (AP)—Italians began voting in sunny weather Sunday in a two-day national election to choose a new Parliament. Millions flocked to the polls.

Bombings that police blamed on extremists seeking greater autonomy for the German-speaking South Tyrol area disturbed Milan and two nearby communities. Three time bombs broke windows in Milan's central railway station. One exploded at a filling station in Osio Sotto. Another was found and disarmed outside a police barracks at Como.

Otherwise things seemed normal from the snow-capped Alps to palm-fringed Sicily for the first general election in the country in five years. The voters will decide whether to retain Premier Amintore Fanfani's left-leaning government.

Reutry noon reports from 60,472 election districts indicated almost one-fifth (34,198,718) eligibles had voted.

The others had plenty of time—the rest of the day and today. Authorities expected 85 to 90 per cent of eligible men and women to mark their choices.

ABSTENTION PENALIZED

Abstention is a misdemeanor in Italy. It is not penalized on an individual's police record. This could affect anyone getting into trouble with the law on some other matter or seeking government jobs.

At stake were 639 seats in the chamber of deputies and 315 in the senate of the Italian republic's fourth parliament. More than 7,000 candidates competed for those positions.

Mr. Fanfani is expected to become known by early Tuesday. Counting is to start after the polls close tonight.

Huge Reception Given Castro In Moscow Visit

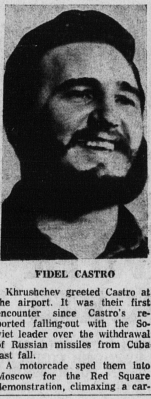

By GEORGE SVERTSEN
MOSCOW (AP)—Premier Khrushchev led Fidel Castro into Moscow Sunday for one of the most elaborate receptions ever given a foreign visitor. He assured the bearded Cuban leader that the Soviet Union stands shoulder-to-shoulder with Cuba against the United States.

Winked to the top of Lenin's tomb in Red Square soon after his arrival from Murnansk, Castro received the cheers of thousands and declared his conviction his regime could not exist without Soviet support.

But despite the 21-gun salute and a Soviet space suit apparently lined for his Moscow arrival, Castro displayed little of the spirit that usually characterizes his public appearances. He smiled rarely and appeared inattentive at times.

And although he credited the Russian revolution with making possible his own rise to power, he added pointedly, "This does not mean that the Soviet Union made this (Cuban) revolution."

Castro flew into Moscow after spending the morning inspecting Soviet missile-carrying submarines near Murnansk, where he landed early Saturday after a secret flight from Havana.

The Skate surfaced first, and the Skate was waiting over an underwater phone prevented the Seadrug from coming up sight of the Skate.

The executive officer of the Seadrug at that time was the skipper, John W. Harvey of Philadelphia.

Luck was with him then, but deserted him a little more than eight months later. For Harvey became the skipper of the nuclear submarine Thresher. He and 128 other men aboard perished April 30 as the Thresher vanished off Cape Cod.

UNDER ICE PACK

The rendezvous of the 368-foot Skate with her sister sub, the Seadrug, under the polar ice pack was announced by President Kennedy last Aug. 22.

The navy said at the time that the Skate and Seadrug had surfaced together at the North Pole. Aug. 2 The Skate came from the Atlantic, the Seadrug from the Pacific.

There was no indication in the announcement that there had been a close call.

It now has been learned that the Seadrug reached the rendezvous point on July 31, a full week before the Skate.

The two submarines then travelled side by side under the water until they reached the North Pole. At that point, the Skate surfaced.

Capt. Joseph L. Skoog Jr. of Seattle, skipper of the Skate, then stood on his bridge watching for smoke from the Seadrug in front of his bow and stern as a signal that it was preparing to surface.

Shortly a Skate lookout reported a smoke float on the Seadrug's stern.

Skoog leaped to an under-plate and shouted a warning to the Seadrug. D. Summit of Nashville, Tenn., captain of the Seadrug, was about and surfaced close to her sister sub.
