Corns? —just say Blue-jay to your druggist Stops Pain Instantly The simplest way to end a corn is Blue-jay. A touch stops the pain instantly. Then the corn loosens and comes out. Made in two forms—a colorless, clear liquid (one drop does it) and an extra thin plaster. Use whichever form you prefer, plasters of the liquid—the action is the same. Safe, gentle. Made in a world-famed laboratory. Sold by all druggists. Free: Write Bauer & Black, Toronto, Dept. 771 for valuable book, "Correct Care of the Foot."

Picton-Charlottetown Ferry Service Commencing May 1st the steamer "Constance" will leave Picton for Charlottetown at 4 p. m., or immediately after the arrival of the Sydney train, making round trips daily thereafter between Picton and Charlottetown, and will continue to do so provided the ship is paid a subsidy by the Dominion Government, which has been provided for this service. Should the "Constance" not be paid this subsidy by the Dominion Government, then the ship will make three (3) round trips per week, leaving Picton on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, and leaving Charlottetown on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays. The "Constance" has been extensively remodelled and refitted, this year, especially for this route, and is now capable of transporting passengers, freight and automobiles between Picton and Charlottetown with speed, safety and comfort. Travel by this direct route between Prince Edward Island and Eastern Nova Scotia. Any breaking out or skin irritation on face, neck or body is overcome quickest by applying Mentho Sulphur, says a noted skin specialist. Because of its germ destroying properties, nothing has ever been found to take the place of this sulphur preparation that instantly brings ease from the itching, burning and irritation. Mentho Sulphur heals eczema, ringworm, leaving the skin clear and smooth. It seldom fails to relieve the torment or disfigurement. A little jar of Mentho Sulphur may be obtained at any drug store. It is used like cold cream.

The Wall Flower BY MARION RUBINCAM ENTER GLORIA Chapter 28 One of the worst things Dora had to hear that Summer was the constant sight of Gladys and Morton together. She felt that if she could have gone away, it would be easier. But of course, that was impossible. Jim never talked about Morton after the engagement to Gladys was announced. Dora could only guess how much he knew. At first she was sure he knew everything, he was so awkwardly sympathetic. At first, too, he left the room as soon after Morton came in as possible. Then she noticed that they stopped and talked, while Jim was at work about the farm and Morton came on visits. And one day they were laughing together, and her father's arm rested familiarly on Morton's shoulder while he pointed out something to him. "He's forgotten about it, or else he never knew," she decided. Which was true. Jim was keenly aware at first of the little broken heart that was left at the end of the short romance and he was touched and grieved. But Jim who had never been happy, was afraid to let himself be miserable. If things worked their course, he himself forgot them. At first it was hard, later it came easier. As he hadn't a strong character, it was possible. So Jim almost forgot that his lonely little daughter had built herself a dream castle out of next to nothing and was crying now over its tumbled ruins. Meantime plans for the wedding went on. "What to drive in town with this morning?" Gladys asked once. "You can get the groceries and things for mother, while Mortie and I go horse hunting." "That's a good idea," agreed Aunt Maude. "Dora, you look as though you'd been asked to a funeral. I'll do your work, take the morning off. What horse have you in mind, Gladys?" "Breams' old place," Gladys answered. "I'd rather have a brand new one, but it costs to build, and we thought we'd take this and do it over and then build in a couple of years, if father will lend us the money." And Dora had to drive up to the old Breams' place—a brick house in a nice old garden—and was outside while Gladys and Morton were "inspecting" within. They came out in great spirits about it. Gladys made plans the whole drive home. Then came plans for the trousseau. "I simply can't get a decent thing at Dyers or any of our shops," Gladys pouted. "Mother, let's go to the city, we can get such nice things." Aunt Maude grumbled at the expense. If they wanted New York they could honeymoon there! But Gladys said she had to shop there first, so as usual she had her way. "I want the grandest trousseau anyone in Norris City ever had," she announced. "Pink crepe de chine underclothes and real lace. Father's got the money, why can't he spend it on me?" "In my days girls didn't wear pink crepe de whatever it is," said Grandma White sourly. At which Gladys laughed. "I'll buy you a black crepe do chine for my wedding, granny," she said flippantly. And the old lady was more inclined to approve the expensive trip. Jim made plans within himself to "light off south" when the wedding was over and the cold days set in. The ceremony was to take place in September. Gladys and her mother went off for a week's orgy of money spending. They were to stay in Newark, across the river, where Aunt Maude had a cousin, and take the train to the metropolis every day. "That leaves you with the work to do and grandma to look after," Aunt Maude said looking at Dora doubtfully. "But I'll make the men eat a cold lunch in the fields and you'll only have their supper to cook. Peter says Jim was to mend the barn roof this week, but he'd better lay off that and help you." "I can manage," Dora answered, glad to have a week free from her cousin's noisy pleasure and the regular sight of Morton, half pleased half resigned, still uncomfortable when he was near her. So they went. And Dora did not expect to see Morton during their stay. They left on a Saturday, Sunday came, warm and brilliantly sunny. Dora had cleared away the last dish from the Sunday dinner, and was wondering whether her father would climb Knob Hill with her, to read Thackeray—when a carriage drove up and stopped by the kitchen door. Morton's voice called, "Dora!" And out of the carriage jumped a slender little woman, black eyed, black haired, with a clear laugh and a "What a darling place!" Then came Morton—and a boy of six or so, and another man, whom Dora knew to be in Morton's law office. She was ashamed of her lack as she went to the door.

WANT EMBARGO OTTAWA, April 29—The suggested embargo on export of fresh caught fish was strongly advocated by Mr. Bell Irving, British Columbia member, before the Marine and Fisheries committee yesterday morning. He cited the evidence in 1916 of sixteen million pounds of fresh fish exported from British Columbia to American canners and that via net advantage to Canada of having that fish put up in this country had been half a million dollars.

A Real Bicycle For a Real Boy

"Why don't you ride your bicycle to school any more, Bill?" "You got it second-hand, Dad—remember?" "That's right! What kind of bicycles have the other boys?" "They're nearly all C. C. M.'s. The best ones are, anyway." "I see. What make would you like best?" "Why, of course, a C. C. M. Dad, every time!"

Dad Offers Him One for Passing

"Well, there's never any looseness or tightness when you're pedalling. You feel that every single bit of weight you put on the pedals counts for speed." "And the C. C. M. doesn't tire r fellow out, either, Dad. Why young Mac Reynolds—he's only half as big as me—rides around all day on his C. C. M. It never tires him out." "That's a fine idea, Bill. Dig in, now, pass your exams, and that C. C. M. bike is yours." (Bill Passed All Right.)
