

Actor Most His Life Kilbride Sought Mainly To Be Alone

By Bob Thomas
HOLLYWOOD (AP) — He wanted nothing more than to be left alone.
Percy Kilbride was a puzzle to the Hollywood crowd. He had been an actor most of his life, starting in his native San Francisco before he moved to Hollywood. He had played hundreds of roles in stock companies all over the West, getting stranded in some of the lesser towns.
He finally made it to Broadway and became a standard character man. His wry, nasal voice, his wide-eyed countenance and his spare frame were accepted familiar in a succession of comedy roles. He merely wanted to be left alone.

Well, no always," he replied with his shy grin. "When I was a kid, we used to sketch a bit. I mean, supposing a girl was going out with the company and the one that made his career, was he Pa Kettle. A lifelong bachelor, he had to play the rural patriarch of dozen kids."
Then the movies.
He was generally cast as a laudible, if not a likable, character. He had always been a city fellow—he had always been a city fellow. He was generally cast as a laudible, if not a likable, character. He had always been a city fellow—he had always been a city fellow.

HATED ATTENTION
The Kettle series made him famous, but he hated it. He had always lived near Hollywood Boulevard and he enjoyed talking to the fans who would stop in front of a block without stopping in front of an autograph-seeking tourist.
The series finally became intolerable for him. He was required to perform violent stunts which his frail frame could not endure. And after playing a variety of hard roles, he found it boring. He had no pleasure in posing in a Pa Kettle film after film.

MARY HAWORTH Christmas Office Parties Are Exposed And Deplored
Dear Mary Haworth: Some time ago you had a very good article about Christmas office parties. I could apply to my place of work.
Although I have worked there nine years and attended nine parties last year's was the worst yet. One girl was injured and is still crippled as a result of an auto accident in which her escort to an "after" party (the regular party) was a married man co-worker.
The incident was very cleverly covered up.
From our floor alone (the second floor) four of our girls went to other places ("after" party) until daybreak. It was a married man who was the escort to the "after" party. It was a married man who was the escort to the "after" party.
