MARY HAWORTH Group Therapy Assists In Confidence Building

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Some time ago you answered a question of whether group therapy is superficial and profit motivated, hence presumably a waste of time, as a certain lay analyst had advised his patient, or whether it has real mind healing potential.

As usual you spoke straight to the point and your point was that group leader, and upon the (pending upon the caliber of the group leader, and upon the (patient) participants' preparedness to cooperate.

Speaking from my own experience, having spent most of the last year in just such a venture, I am completely sold on group therapy.

You remarked that, in general, postgraduates of intensive analytic treatment (on a private client basis) are the most promising candidates for accelerated progress in the group.

The leader of my group is a highly respected professional therapist, most certainly not motivated by greed. Members of the group who, like myself are postgraduate analysts, (patients undergoing analysis) seem to be benefiting most.

The others are strangely resistant. Some throw up smoke screens of words. Others toss around bed hurrings. One fellow sits like a great Rock of Gibraltar, immobile, jaws set, hands clenched, saying nothing.

At the summer's end, however, most of us recognized that we were indeed "Fortunate Strangers" the title of a book, written about group therapy some years ago; and now out of print, I believe. The group will be reconvening, in two units, later this fall a boon to the restful in my opinion. Sincerely, P. H. DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have been in psychotherapy for about 10 years. After facing and working through, as well as I could, the reasons for my despair, wondering if the agonizing effort to learn had been worthwhile.

Part of the problem was that I didn't know what constitutes normal society or normal social behavior.

When my doctor suggested group therapy I was reluctant, feeling that I couldn't speak of my problem before a mixed audience. And it was a year before I could. But in that year I learned much.

Also I began to feel, for the first time, the sense of being a member of a group. And I was beginning to be myself, and to test many reactions in a relatively safe environment. I didn't particularly like all the members, nor did they all like me. But we were learning to appreciate each other's insights, and most importantly, learning to help one another.

Finally, when I could speak of my problem to the group, the members' response was objective and very helpful. Group therapy isn't merely an effort to serve the greatest good of the greatest number; nor is it merely a dilute form of individual therapy.

It is the only way I know that persons with difficulties in interpersonal relations can act together, with guidance, to work out their problems.

There is an objectivity in group treatment, because of the 8 or 10 individual viewpoints involved, that isn't possible in private therapy. And this objectivity is so important to those of

Descriptive Expo Catalog Is Valuable Visitors' Guide

Today, the Provincial Women's Committee for Expo '67 has what we consider will be interesting news for prospective visitors to Expo. We refer to a descriptive catalog which has been compiled on all the pavilions and Expo projects, and also a chronological list of all events. The information manual written by personnel of the Public Information Service Division gives technical description of each pavilion and all details on various projects, including lists of advisory committees public safety services and hours of opening. This information will be of real value to us in planning our visit to Expo. It will give us a working knowledge of all things to see, so that when we arrive at "Expo Entrance" we will know exactly the things we personally wish to see and do; and we may map our itinerary in advance to ensure that we do not miss out on any of the particular events, which we feel will be of major importance and interest to each of us individually.

Here's some additional good news - The Provincial Women's Committee tell us that the second delivery of Expo passports are delivered at long last; and these are being picked up at 188 Prince St., Charlottetown, at the office of Mrs. Helen Bolger, RN, Treasurer of the Provincial Committee.

Plans are being made for two special meetings in the near future. One is scheduled for Summerside on Tuesday, November 22nd, and the other in Charlottetown on Wednesday, November 23rd. The public is not only invited but urged to attend either or both of these meetings, when Mrs. Louise Stuart of Montreal, co-ordinator of women's activities for Expo will be the guest speaker, and will bring a message of real interest, telling of developments at the site of Expo. The Women's Committee promises that these meetings will be enjoyed, as Mrs. Stuart in her innately pleasing and vivacious manner tells us of all the wonderful things to see and do at this mammoth world exhibition celebrating the centenary of our country.

ELLEN'S DIARY

The Fireside Beckons These Frosty Evenings

"The air is cool tonight" James husband of ours, offers, its breath following him in from a last round out about. . . There are, we know, stars over the hills and valley. They glimmer, clean and sparkling through the frost - touch, and it comes to mind that November's new moon will be, according to legend "the Frosty Moon".

"The fire feels good" James smiles, picking up an apple from the bowl, the children during their evening visit, brought up from a barrel in the cellar. He comes now to his armchair, and newspaper.

The sticks from the withered and broken apple bough, we found in the orchard today, and in a whim saved for the night's burning, return to mind now, something one Thomas Aldrich, enjoying a similar fuel, wrote of his open woodfire well back in the years.

"What is more cheerful now in the fall of the year, than an open woodfire?"

"Do you hear those little chirps and twitters coming out of that piece of apple-wood? Those are the ghosts of the robins and bluebirds that sang upon the bough when it was in blossom last spring. In summer whole flocks of them came fluttering about the fruit - trees under the window. So-I have singing birds all the year round!"

As we do at this farm. And in the rare sticks of apple - wood we can also fancy the bright blue of the springtime sky, the deep hum of the bees in the mass of pink - white bloom. And alas presently, the drift of petals to have one dwell soberly for a moment on time's flight, before remembering the delight of the harvest-apples, and those of the later autumn that in a charming picture, sun-kist, redden against the boughs.

Our new week opened literally with a "Bang!" An air rifle a more or less interesting contraption of toy, in that it is, as such hazardous things go, harmless, because there is no ammunition used, was the answer to Peter's recent concern as to what gift-in his homing from the Fair, Mack would bring.

"Now what will Mack bring me?" was the thought, which kept his eyes to the hilltop, and his feet pacing along the lane at the expected time of Mack's return.

"He will bring you himself" we said. "And isn't that a fine gift!"

"I know that" he agreed. "And I will like to have him home. But when he was going, he promised to bring me something for my birthday" he said.

Here it was then, today, coming into the family's innocent moments unexpectedly, to cause some startled reactions as they went about their affairs. And yesterday, Peter turned six!

Mack was back to his plowing this morning, the cow-kind to the open range or to stall. And it was a November Monday. . . No birdsong, few flowers November gives. Yet now in the fire's soign are the chirps and twitters from the orchard, the ghosts of the robins and bluebirds that sang upon the bough when it was in blossom last spring.

Until tomorrow . . . Diary . . . Good-night . . .
