THE TRIAL OF ALCOHOL, CHARGED WITH MURDER, ROBBERY, &c.

REFRAINS FROM THE USE OF IT AND FOR THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.
The People vs. Alcohol.
Present—Hon. R. CANDOR, Chief Justice.
HON. S. IMBERTVILLE, Judge.
HON. G. PATIENCE, Judge.
HON. H. HORESTY, Judge.
Counsel for the people—J. GOODWILL, Esq., Attorney General.
Counsel for the defendant—ANIMAL APPETITE, Esq., and SALLY INTEREST, Esq.
Sergeant—J. HAVERTY, Esq.
Clerk of Court—B. SHERIDAN, Esq.
July 25, 1854—Met at 10 o'clock, A. M. Present all the Judges.

On motion of the Attorney General, A. M., the prisoner was brought into Court by Mr. Sheridan, the deputy sheriff, and placed in the bar. The list of jurors was then called over by the clerk, and the prisoner, by his counsel, was directed to challenge any of them if he saw proper. However, none were challenged, and the following persons, twelve in number, were sworn to try the case, according to law and evidence:

- Mr. Hoagville, Mr. Hoagville,
- Mr. Lovelock, Mr. Lovelock,
- Mr. Horesty, Mr. Horesty,
- Mr. Goodwill, Mr. Goodwill,
- Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Sheridan,
- Mr. Hoagville, Mr. Hoagville,
- Mr. Lovelock, Mr. Lovelock,
- Mr. Horesty, Mr. Horesty,
- Mr. Goodwill, Mr. Goodwill,
- Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Sheridan,

The prisoner was then placed at the bar, and asked to hold up his hand, the indictment was read to the jury. The prisoner was asked for his plea, to which he answered NOT GUILTY. The jury then returned a verdict of Not Guilty. Prisoner—By God and my country. Clerk—God send you a good deliverance.

moners; and he stayed with us most of the time, and he stayed with my wife, with me in feeble health, and as he said he was not in good medical power, and in the neighborhood as he required, I employed him to cure her.

Att. Gen.—And did he do so?
Wit.—No, sir; he grew worse under his management; and what worse than all, she took to very hard drinking; and a miserable life I had of it for a week. Besides, the bill for his services was very heavy; several hundred dollars for medicine and attendance; but I should not have minded that, had he not made my wife a drunkard. At length my eyes were opened, and I found my wife's house; so he did not call on me for several years, and in that time my wife became a sober woman again.

Att. Gen.—Do you now consider him as having any just claim to the possession of such medical powers?
Wit.—No, sir, I do not; I am satisfied that he had no right to take a certificate to that effect; at least that is my opinion.

Att. Gen.—Have you any children?
Wit.—I have not, sir; but I had a daughter, but she, poor girl, died. (Weeps.)

Att. Gen.—Witness, I am truly sorry to distress an aged man, and to see a certificate of justice as impertinent, and though painful, I feel it my duty to inquire more particularly about his present state. Are your sons grown to years of discretion?
Wit.—They are grown to years of manhood, and I can't but give them credit for what they manifest much of it; they are very rosy young men, though I am sorry to say it.

Att. Gen.—Do they stop at home and attend to business?
Wit.—No, sir; the two eldest are very seldom at home, and the youngest is almost always gone away. Indeed, sir, they are no comfort to me.

Att. Gen.—Where do they spend their time?
Wit.—At the public house, sir, in company with the prisoner; drinking, gambling, and horse-racing.

Att. Gen.—Do they ever come home intoxicated?
Wit.—Yes, sir, much oftener than they do sober; and then they abuse me and their mother, and throw the whole family into great confusion.

Att. Gen.—Did you ever see the prisoner trying to persuade them to go to the public house?
Wit.—I have, sir, many times. In fact, he does it every day almost; and then they have become so attached to his company, that it seems to me that they will never quit him but he with them.

Att. Gen.—Did you ever use any means to dissuade or reclaim them from such a life of course?
Wit.—Alas, yes, sir; I have prayed and entreated, but I have some respect for my own hair, and not bring them down to the grave with sorrow; but all my remonstrances have had no effect; they have only ridiculed me.

Att. Gen.—You spoke of a daughter who is dead. She was quiet and obedient, and kept her mother from the prison, I presume?
Wit.—Ah, sir, I wish what you say was true; but it is not. She was seduced by the prisoner, but he was attending upon her mother, and died a poor creature, before she was twenty years of age.

Att. Gen.—Do you know anything of the other matters charged in the indictment?
Wit.—I know nothing of them.

Att. Gen.—Do you know of any witnesses for the present.
Cross-examination.

(Animal Appetite, the defendant.)
You said, Mr. Esq., that Mr. Alcohol, my client, was frequently a guest at your father's in his lifetime. Did you not regard him as a very valuable acquaintance?
Wit.—I cannot say; I suppose that he did, or would have been so, had he not been so drunk.

Att. Gen.—Did you ever bear him complain of any misconduct in Mr. Alcohol?
Wit.—I can't say, sir; I never did; I do not think I ever heard him complain.

Att. Gen.—Did you ever see him, or were you ever with him, when he was drunk?
Wit.—I was not medically employed by him, and I never saw him, and I never saw your father esteem him very highly in that capacity.

Att. Gen.—He was employed by my father for a great number of years, but he did not cure him, for he died of the disease at last.
Wit.—I was not a physician, and I never saw your father; and I never saw him, and I never saw your father esteem him very highly in that capacity.

Att. Gen.—Did you ever see him, or were you ever with him, when he was drunk?
Wit.—I was not medically employed by him, and I never saw him, and I never saw your father esteem him very highly in that capacity.

An Ap.—Witness, have you not been much in the practice of frequenting the public house, and till you and Mr. Alcohol had the difficulty about the payment of a bill which you had run at a tavern, you were frequently seen in his company.
Wit.—I was, it is true, but I had not then learned his bad character. As soon as I discovered that I declined any further intercourse with him.

An Ap.—Well, sir, did you not for a length of time encourage your wife to frequent the company of Mr. Alcohol; and did you never tell her to invite him home?
Wit.—I have; but did not know him as well as I do now.

An Ap.—But had you not been told that he was a dangerous companion for young men?
Wit.—I had, it is true; but I thought those who told me were prejudiced. I now regret my folly.

An Ap.—Has not Mr. Alcohol been several times at your house quite recently; say within six months?
Wit.—He has, but it was not at my request; my wife has invited him.

An Ap.—You can sit at dinner, sir.
The next witness sworn by Mr. Sobermind.
Att. Gen.—Mr. Sobermind, do you know the prisoner at the bar?
Wit.—I do not, sir, very well.

Att. Gen.—Please then to tell me what you know of him.
Wit.—Well, sir, I can truly say I know nothing of him. In my younger days I used to keep his company very constantly, and many has been the bad scrape into which he has led me, and I am not exactly sure when my father died, and left me a very snug little property—in a year or two after, I formed an intimacy with him, and I was not long in getting acquainted with the tavern, after that, the horse-race, and the theatre; I tremble, sir, when I think of it.

Att. Gen.—Do you remember to attend at the card table, and whole days at the nine-pin alley. My property in this way was soon gone, and I was not long in getting acquainted with the tavern, after that, the horse-race, and the theatre; I tremble, sir, when I think of it.

all the mother found a resting place in the grave, and the children were put out as servants as apprentices.
Att. Gen.—Mr. Sobermind, do you know anything of the charge in the indictment, that persons instigated by the prisoner have committed suicide?
Wit.—I do, sir. I have seen several such cases, and I know them to have been persuaded to the act by the prisoner, because I saw him operating to induce them to do it.

Att. Gen.—Will you favor the court with an account of these reasons?
Wit.—In persuading them, that their characters were ruined; their property dissipated; their families and friends rendered miserable by their presence; and finally, that they were considered outcasts in society, and that they might as well die as live, and so removed from all evils they suffered here in this life. And then to aid his suggestions he would urge them to drink; and three or four instances have been observed of persons went direct from the bottle to the fatal place of self-destruction.

Att. Gen.—Have you ever seen the prisoner standing by one who had committed suicide, when he was found?
Wit.—I was told that, sir; I have known him to be found by the side of the dead man's coat, and using all his strength to weigh him down, and sir, I once saw a mother take the body of her child, and throw it into the water, when he had been found in the position I have just described, hanging to the body of her dead son.

CAUSES OF MARINE DISASTERS.
A correspondent in the "New York Daily Times," of the 29th ult., attributes the recent heavy marine losses to the insufficient strength and capacity of the vessels.
