THE PLAGUE IN CHINA.

IT RESEMBLES IN CHARACTER THAT OF LONDON IN 1665.

More Fatal, However, It Now Rages in Hong-Kong and Canton—60,000 Dead in the Latter City and Forty a Day in the Former.

The special correspondent of the New York Herald says the telegraph is inadequate to convey an idea of the clear character and extent of the visitation which is ravaging Canton, Hong-Kong and other ports and throwing that part of the world generally into a state of terror and panic almost without parallel.

The plague, which has long been raging in the two first named places and it has carried off tens of thousands of victims in the last few weeks, but so long as it was confined to Canton and Hong-Kong and other ports and throwing that part of the world generally into a state of terror and panic almost without parallel.

The first sign observed was the appearance of thousands of rats, swollen and evidently dying, crawling up from the streets and the houses that had become filthy city. These vermin are invariably the precursors of all such visitations in Southern China, and every year they accompany the outbreak of the plague in Peking, where it appears to be almost epidemic.

It is frightfully rapid in its course. Purging diarrhoea at once sets in and a state of rigor follows, by which the patient is reduced to a mere skin and bones, death ensuing and the body turning black, putrid and swollen to three times its size in the course of twelve to twenty-four hours.

Very strong men have resisted the attack for two days and then succumbed, but as many as eighty per cent of those attacked in Canton died on the first day. Those who lived for three or four days generally recovered, but they were very few. Six thousand fatal cases were reported to have occurred in one district in Canton—the old Mohammedan quarter of the city—within a week, these figures being checked by the number of coffins given out for the burial of the dead by one charitable institution.

A foreign missionary resident in Canton made systematic inquiries, which he avers show that up to the 8th June, at least 60,000 people have been carried off. All the immense business of the city was at a standstill, and the inhabitants who could do so were fleeing into the country. Several medical and other experts were despatched from Hong-Kong to inquire into the case of the plague, and they all agreed that it was due primarily to the incredible filth, the abominable habits and the poverty of the Cantonese, aided no doubt by the prolonged drought, which caused the filth in the open sewers to germinate into hideous forms of life.

Some people believe that the fondness of the Cantonese for rats as an article of food is largely accountable for the pestilence, which the rats caught first from eating the festering contents of the sewers. There may be something in this, for it is a fact that none of the European residents of Canton or Hong-Kong have been attacked by the plague, which is entirely confined to the Chinese. Nor in one hospital where over four hundred patients lay, three hundred of whom died in a few hours, were any of the attendants attacked. I myself saw, however, one case of a European being carried off by an exactly similar illness in Peking in 1857, when the Chinese there were dying at the rate of over one hundred a day. This man lived as a Chinese, feeding among them and eating their food. So far as I can learn this is the only instance on record of the bubonic plague among non-natives.

The doctors describe the symptoms as follows:—With or without preliminary warning in the shape of malaise or chill there is a sudden onset of fever, rising to 105 or over. There is much headache and cerebral disturbance, accompanied by stupor. In from twelve to twenty hours glandular swelling occurs in the neck, armpits or groin, rapidly enlarging to the size of a cow's leg. It is hard and exceedingly tender. With or without a decline of the fever the patient sinks deeper into a condition of coma and dies, usually at the end of forty-eight hours or sooner. If six days are reached recovery is hopeful. The glandular swelling shows no sign of suppuration. In some cases epistaxis or vomiting of blood occurs, petechiae appear on a few, but no regular eruption. Such are, briefly, the symptoms at the beginning of the disease.

Cobra Poison as Medicine. Dried and pulverized, the cobra is almost as deadly as when injected by the live cobra. Native doctors use it medicinally in microscopic doses, and have a barbarous method of extracting it. They put a cobra into an earthen pot and drop a banana in after it. They then tie down the lid and let the cobra eat the fruit. The wretched snake is soon tortured into a rage in its baking prison, and bites the banana in its paroxysms. The fruit is afterward carefully dried. It is then ready for use. It is pronounced under some circumstances to be a wonderfully powerful stimulant, but is only used in extreme cases, and even then probably does infinitely more harm than good.

Eighty Cent Gas. The city authorities of Chicago produce figures to show that they can make and deliver gas to the citizens at eighty cents, and cover into the City Treasury $2,000,000 a year in the transaction. By and by the great frauds of the gas companies really are taken at an average, the residents of cities in this country are paying twice as much for gas as they should pay, yet when anything is said against such extortion it is called "howling" or something equivalent to "American Machinists."

LANSING, Mich., July 2.—A friend of William Langley formerly of this city, who of London, Ont., received a letter a few months ago stating that Mr. Langley had Bright's disease. Dress goods may have intrinsic merit, and yet lack the possibility of perfect drapery. Without perfect drapery it is in vain that the goods are costly, or the moiliste Parisian. The draping is the charm which gives grace to a woman. There is one particular in which Priestley's famous dress fabric stands unrivalled. It is universally known that they wear better than other fabrics, but they drap with a grace which endears them to the aesthetic sense of every fastidious woman.
